Nixon Names Campus Panel; Hickel Ouster Hints Denied

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (UPI)—President Nixon Saturday named a nine-member commission headed by former Gov. William W. Scranton of Pennsylvania to recommend ways to control campus violence and prevent future tragedies like the killings at Kent State and Jackson State.

As the President spent a relaxing weekend at his Florida retreat, the traveling White House denied persistent reports that Interior Secretary Walter J. Hickel will be replaced soon as a member of the Cabinet. (See earlier story, page 2.)

Named to the Commission on Campus Unrest along with Scranton were four whites and four blacks, including two police officials, three college faculty members, one student, one attorney and one newspaper editor.

"There is nothing that any of us can do to restore the lives that have been lost or to undo the other effects of past campus violence," Nixon said in a formal statement. "But the commission can help us to avoid future incidents of the sort which occurred this past spring."

The administration announced plans to appoint the commission following the killing last month of four students at Kent State University in Ohio and two students at predominantly black Jackson State College in Mississippi.

White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Hickel "has not submitted his resignation and he has no intention of resigning." Asked if the President has requested Hickel's resignation, Ziegler replied: "We have not. I know of no intention for us to ask for his resignation."

But when newsmen asked if the President was "happy" with Hickel's work, Ziegler relevant. Secretary Hickel is proceeding with his work as Secretary of Interior."

The press secretary said later he did not mean to imply that Nixon was "unhappy" with Hickel.

Scranton, 52, was governor of Pennsylvania from 1963 to 1967. In 1964 he made an unsuccessful bid for the Republican presidential nomination that went to Sen. Barry Goldwater.

Others named to the commission were James Ahern, 38, police chief of New Haven, Conn.; Erwin D. Canham, 66, editor-in-chief of the Christian Science Monitor; Dr. James E. Cheek, 37, president of Howard University in Washington; Benjamin O. Davis, 57, public safety director of Cleveland; Martha A. Jordan In Uneasy Quiet, 134 Americans Evacuated

AMMAN, Jordan (UPI)—Despite a fragile peace in Amman after five days of fighting, diplomats said today Palestinian guerrillas and the Jordanian government were so far apart in their views that a new crisis seemed inevitable.

Guerrillas controlled much of the city but government forces surrounded it with tanks and heavy weapons.

To achieve even a temporary break in the fighting, King Hussein of Jordan had to agree to remove his uncle, Sherif Nasser Ben Jamil, as commander-in-chief of the army.

Hussein warned it was his last concession and that if backed into a corner, he would fight. Diplomats said the guerrillas were keeping the pressure on with their rejection of a political settlement to the Middle East crisis.

Hussein repeatedly has said he would negotiate with Israel. This difference on such a basic issue is bound to result in more friction and cause the crisis to flare again, the diplomats said.

More than 500 persons were killed or wounded in the street fighting over guerrilla demands to be allowed unrestricted raids on Israel from Jordanian bases.

Foreigners were fleeing the country, many leaving their belongings behind.

The U.S. embassy was reduced to a skeleton staff and Britain warned all its citizens in nonessential jobs to leave.

In Cairo, political sources said Egypt intervened with the Palestinian guerrilla leadership to protect American lives and secure the release of captives in Amman.

(The sources said a number of American dependents were given shelter at the Egyptian Embassy residence in Amman at the height of hostilities between guerrillas and Jordanian forces.)

About 300 persons, most of them Americans, Britons and Germans, flew to safety aboard chartered aircraft Friday. They included many of the 65 persons

Marin County Staff Workers Get Welfare

At least five full-time employees of the County of Marin are receiving welfare under a special program designed to put public assistance recipients into jobs, county officials disclosed yesterday.

The five are working in the public social services department as welfare aides, earning a monthly salary of $451 plus public assistance grants.

Donald Sanford, assistant to department head Betty L. Presley, said there may be two other county employees working under the program but their identity is not known as present.

The disclosure was a result of an investigation begun last month by County Auditor-Controller Michael Mitchell after it was revealed that highly paid county employees in Alameda were on welfare.

The five Marin workers are getting assistance under Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Miss Presley said the grants are made possible under a 1967 amendment to the Social Security Act.

Mitchell explained that the amount of aid is based on a state formula that takes into account such factors as number of children, age, sex and family circumstances.

Miss Presley said the program is not limited to govern-

Mosquitos Budget Up; Tax Holds

A $178,563 1970-71 budget, up $28,563 from this year's, has been approved by the Marin County Mosquito Abatement District board.

Allan D. Telford, district manager, said the tax rate will be held at 2.5 cents per $100 assessed valuation for the seventh consecutive year.

Major budget items include $120,503 for salaries and benefits, up $10,375 from this year; $31,045 for services and supplies, up $1,125, and $25,015 for fixed assets, up $15,064.

Telford also announced appointment of two new members to the board: Lt. Col. Robert B. Rankin of Mill Valley and Gilbert Dubuc of Larkspur.

Mosquito activity in the district has been held this spring to the lowest level in three years, he reported, but yellowjacket activity has increased during the last month.

BUT THE SHOW WENT ON . . .

Proud parents were assembling for the San Rafael High School commencement last night when the rains came, sending the audience clutching for makeshift shelter. 'No Early End' To Viet War: Klein

Indochina Report To Press

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Herbert G. Klein, the administration's communications director and a member of the team President Nixon sent to Indochina on a fact-finding mission, said Friday night that "we can see no early end" to the Vietnam War.

Klein, who returned to the United States last Tuesday after touring Vietnam and Cambodia for several days with the 13-man team, said the situation in the war zone was inproving.

'MAKING GAINS'

"We're making gains, we're making progress," he said. "No one can say how much or how soon ... but the fact that we're making significant progress is a very encouraging thing in a war which perhaps will be prolonged. I think we can see no early end."

Klein issued his forecast in a speech at the annual awards dinner of the Washington chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, the national professional journalistic society.

Reds Threatening Cambodia Lifeline

SAIGON (AP) — The Communist command in Cambodia was reported building up pressure Saturday on Kompong Speu, threatening to cut off Phnom Penh's last remaining road link to its major seaport and vital oil supplies from abroad.

The Cambodian capital depends on oil to generate its electricity and it has but 15 days' supplies on hand, officials said.

A military spokesman in Phnom Penh said about 1,000 Communist command troops were believed massing for fresh attacks on Kofpong Speu, the key town on Route 4 about 30 miles southeast of the capital.

The roadway runs to Kompong Som, formerly Sihanoukville, Cambodia's major seaport, and site of Cambodia's only oil refinery.

Kompong Speu has been under attack for the two days but no casualty reports were available. The military spokesman said the U.S.-built highway was still open but travel on it was risky.

In other Cambodian action enemy mortar attacks were reported 80 miles north of Phnom Penh at Kompong Thom on the road to the historic ruins at Angkor, where Communist command troops were reported to have set up supply depots and hospitals in the Angkor temple complex.

Cambodian officials hace said Angkor would be declared an "open city" to avoid destruction or damage to its temples, some dating 800 years.

Cambodians Denounce Rumor Of Split Nation

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (UPI)—High-level Cambodian government officials today described as "ludicrious" published reports that Cambodia has decided to cede control of almost half the country to Communist forces.

The reports, not carried by UPI, were widely printed Friday.

One official Cambodian source, closely connected with Premier Lon Nol, said the story was "obviously Communist propaganda."

"As you can see by our communiques, there is fighting in all our provinces," the source said in explaining that Cambodian forces were contesting North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in all parts of the country.

Another high-level source said: "This story is ludicrous. We haven't given any part of Cambodia to anyone and never will—particularly the Communists."

U.S. sources were particularly upset at what one described as "unfounded rumors at best."

Laos Troops Recapture A Key City

VIENTIANE, Laos (UPI) — Military sources said today Laotian troops have reoccupied the important province capital of Saravane. It was seized by Communist forces last Tuesday.

Field reports reaching Vientiane from Saravane, in southern Laos, said government patrol units reentered the city after heavy air strikes by American-built T28 fighter-bombers and that North Vietnamese troops made no attempt to resist.

Sources said the North Vietnamese may have withdrawn to take up positions in the hills.

The loss of Sarvane had been described as a serious blow because it gave the Communists control over a wide area of southern Laos, including the breadbasket region known as the Bolovens Plateau. It appeared that the Communists were trying to establish a new sanctuary there to replace havens lost in Cambodia.

Election Upheld

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The California Supreme Court has denied the petition of Los Angeles County Supervisor Kenneth Hahn to invalidate the entire June primary election on grounds of "massive foulups" in vote counts.

Wilson To Moscow?

LONDON (AP) — The Soviet government proposed today that Harold Wilson, as prime minister, make an official visit to Moscow late next month.

Marchers Promote Flag Day

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Thirteen labor leaders wearing hard hats and a group of local Elks Club members conducted a demonstration Friday on the state Capitol steps to promote Flag Day.

"It's publicity all the way through to get something in the paper that Sunday is Flag Day," explained Bill Richards, Americanism chairman for the North Central District of the Elks. "We're not getting involved in labor or anti-this or that."

The local labor leaders, dressed in business suits, stood on the steps while a man dressed as Uncle Sam walked toward them carrying the American Flag. He was followed by three Boy Scouts who distributed small flags to the labor men and the few spectators..

Richards said the hard hats were not worn in support of New York construction workers who attacked antiwar student demonstrators.

"It's a gimmick to call attention to Flag Day," he said. "We're trying to get people to talk and think about patriotism."

13, Including Judge, Face Stockton Counts

STOCKTON (UPI)—A grand jury has indicted 13 persons, including a prominent lawyer and a judge he is accused of bribing, in what investigators said was an attempt to loot a financial firm of 1.5 million.

Authorities said the name of the superior court judge involved would not be made public until arrangements were completed for his surrender on charges of accepting bribes.

Among the crimes charged Friday were grand theft, issuing checks with insufficient funds, bribing a financial officer and bribing a judge.

Gordon Rose, deputy attorney general, said thrift certificates, similar to certificates of deposit, were purchased from AVCO Thrift Co. with worthless checks, while some were stolen outright.

AVCO Thrift, a financial institution which is a subsidiary of AVCO Corp., actually did not lose all the money despite the fraudulent schemes, Rose said.

He said the FBI recovered many of the certificates, including one seizure of $600,000 worth in Nevada last March. Final loss to AVCO was estimated to be about $200,000.

In addition to the lawyer and judge, the indictments included businessmen and a bank president who is head of the Port Commission in this shipping and agricultural community 50 miles east of San Francisco.

Leonard Pores, 51, newly reelected to a four-year term as president of the port commission and president of the Stockton Bank of Agriculture and Commerce, was charged with conspiracy to pervert and obstruct justice and conspiracy to commit grand theft.

Attorney John Barkett, 35, was charged with bribing a judge and grand theft.

Joseph A. Broderick, 50, who has been fired as head of AVCO's Stockton office, was charged with being a financial officer who accepted bribes.

Rose said another AVCO branch manager, Frank Yaddow, 43, previously had been charged in a complaint with violating the financial code. He was not mentioned in the latest indictments.

"AVCO was extremely cooperative," said Rose in apparent reference to some financial institutions in similar situations who prefer to take their losses quietly to avoid public scandal.

Among the others indicted were:

Albert Weisinger, 61, co-owner of a Stockton fur shop, bribery and grand theft;

Gust Mazoros, 47, Hayward, bribery;

T.H. Rivers, 35, Orinda, conspiracy to commit grand theft and bribery of a financial officer;

Herbert A. Cox, 36, Los Angeles, conspiracy to bribe a financial officer and issuing worthless checks.

No other details were given in the indictments. Authorities said the names of the others indicted would not be made public until after they were arrested.

Oil—Halts award of new offshore oil leases from Monterey Bay to the Oregon border. (AB684—Bagley, R-San Rafael. 62-0. To Senate.)

Kennedy Endorsed

AMHERST, Mass. (UPI)—Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was endorsed by acclamation for a second full term Friday by the State Democratic Convention and pledged to campaign for "the rebirth of the American dream."

State Sen. President Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke won a six-hour first ballot battle for the convention's gubernatorial endorsement over Boston Mayor Kevin H. White and former lieutenant governor Francis X. Bellotti. The convention also adopted a plank in its platform demanding an immediate return of U.S. servicemen from Indochina.

Senators Disagree On Budget Impact

SACRAMENTO (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee promises to try for a balanced 1970-71 state budget without a tax increase, but another senator says local taxes will have to go up if state spending for some programs is cut.

Sen. Donald Grunsky, R-Watsonville, said Friday he expected the Senate to quickly approve a heavily amended version of the Assembly budget bill Tuesday. The Senate amended the Assembly measure Friday to bring it into balance in the face of an unexpected $141 million deficit.

The Assembly failed to agree Thursday on ways to bring the budget back into balance, so it approved the original—and unbalanced—$6.48 billion proposal made by Gov. Reagan in February. That proposal was thrown out of balance by rising welfare and Medi-Cal costs and unexpectedly low tax revenues because of the cooling economy.

A Democratic senator who sits on the Finance Committee says it isn't possible to balance the budget without increasing the average taxpayer's total tax bill.

Sen. Stephen P. Teale, D-West Point, said major cuts in state spending would mean smaller state contributions to local governments.

"If local government wants to maintain its present level of services there will have to be a hike in the local tax rate to make up the difference in lost state funds," Teale said.

Teale was critical of the Republican governor, who he said "zeroed in on his favorite targets — higher education and welfare — as the places to find the money needed to balance the budget."

But Teale said the Senate Finance Committee, in deciding on a 1.6 per cent across-the-board cut to help balance the program, "rejected the idea of hitting education and the sick and the poor and decided instead on an across-the-board reduction ... so that in effect everyone would suffer equally."

Assemblyman James W. Dent, R-Concord, commented Friday he didn't agree completely with the across-the-board cut "because so much money is tied up in programs which would require statutory changes before reductions could be made."

MISSED BRIEFING

Deepening Rift Between Hickel And President?

WASHINGTON (UPI)—There is widespread speculation in the Interior Department that Secretary Walter J. Hickel may be on his way out because of his deepening ideological split with President Nixon.

The speculation of growing alienation has arisen because Hickel did not attend a White House news briefing on one of his key antipollution proposals Thursday.

A spokesman in Hickel's office denied a report the White House had canceled an invitation to Hickel to attend the news briefing Thursday. The briefing was held on Nixon's request to Congress for authority to buy back federal oil leases that pose a pollution threat to a marine sanctuary in the Santa Barbara Channel off the California coast.

Relations between Nixon and Hickel have been strained since last month when the former Alaska governor sent the president a letter saying the administration was in danger of alienating the nation's young people.

Hickel has been working hard for the oil lease repurchase plan since an oil well blowout in the Santa Barbara channel last year fouled beaches in the area.

Sources indicated there was a possibility Nixon would not remove Hickel, but would diminish his role in administration affairs. Hickel complained at the time he wrote his letter that long periods of time elapsed between meetings between Nixon and his cabinet members.

Nixon Opens Income Tax Files For Douglas Probe

WASHINGTON (UPI) —President Nixon has given the House Judiciary Committee permission to inspect Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas' income tax returns in connection with its inquiry into possible impeachment of Douglas.

Nixon previously wrote a letter to Rep. Emanuel Celler, D-N.Y., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, in which he authorized all federal agencies to cooperate with the investigation.

Friday Nixon signed an executive order directing the Internal Revenue Service to open Douglas' returns to inspection.

It was learned the special subcommittee agreed this week to seek an extension of the June 20 deadline by which it was supposed to report its recommendations to the parent Judiciary Committee.

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford, who spearheaded the impeachment drive, was said to have agreed an extension was needed.

Coroner Tells Little About Thoresen

FRESNO, Calif. (UPI)—The Fresno County coroner says William E. Thoresen III, the mysterious millionaire with a passion for guns, was shot five times in the back.

That is apparently all he will say.

Coroner's pathologist Dr. John Miller said Friday Thoresen died from bleeding in the chest cavity caused by live bullets which entered his back. He said the district attorney had told him to release only that information.

Deputy Coroner Lt. Walter Cook said he doubted the full report would be made public because "publicity might be harmful to the case."

Thoresen's attractive wife, Louise, 34, pleaded innocent Friday to murdering her husband with a .38 caliber revolver from his massive arsenal.

Thomas Jefferson refused to proclaim Thanksgiving, denouncing it as a "monarchial practice."

Brazil Bows To Rebel Note On Kidnaping

RIO DE JANEIRO (UPI) — The Brazilian military government broadcast a revolutionary proclamation from the kidnapers of West German Ambassador Ehrenfried von Holleben today in an effort to save the diplomat's life.

The kidnapers demanded the publication of their seven-point program, including an appeal for increased guerrilla warfare against the government, as a condition for the release of the 61-year-old ambassador.

The government did not reveal whether there were other demands. President Emilion Garrastazu Medici and his top aides, who flew to Rio de Janeiro from the capital in Brasilia, were coordinating the efforts to rescue Von Holleben.

In Dusseldorf, West German Chancellor Willy Brandt said his government was taking "both conventional and unconventional" steps to seek the ambassador's release. The reference to unconventional methods was thought to refer to an appeal to Washington for U.S. help in negotiating the release.

Terrorists with submachine guns abducted Von Holleben Thursday night, killing one of his bodyguards and seriously wounding two others.

Von Holleben is the ninth diplomat to be kidnaped in Latin America since September, and the third in Brazil in the past year. The West German ambassador to Guatemala, Karl von Spreti, was kidnaped in March and killed when ransom demands were not met.

Peru Aid Urged

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The founder of a California organization soliciting aid for victims of the massive earthquake in Peru has returned from Lima with a plea for more contributions.

C. W. Robinson, who formed the California Friends of Peru Committee for Emergency Relief, said Friday the greatest need is replacement of destroyed structures.

Robinson and San Francisco physician Lester Luz flew to Lima Tuesday aboard a chartered Braniff 707 carrying the first load of emergency supplies donated in the Bay Area.

Rubber Strike Ends

AKRON, Ohio (UPI)—B. F. Goodrich Co. and the United Rubber Workers Union were scheduled to sign a new three-year contract today, ending a five-week nationwide walkout.

Operations at the plants were to resume Monday. Production and maintenance workers in Los Angeles returned Friday.

The agreement ends a nationwide strike against Goodrich and the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., which signed a contract June 10.

Talks were continuing with the General Tire and Rubber Co., Uniroyal, and the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. while work continues on a day-to-day basis.

Knoxville Unrest

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI)—Police sealed off a four-block area in a predominantly black section of Knoxville Friday night after several altercations followed a shooting incident.

An area near the Lonsdale housing project was closed for about an hour and a half while members of the Knoxville Urban League and other groups went into the area to talk with residents and calm tempers. The incident followed the shooting of Nathaniel McDowell, 23.

McDowell, a Negro, was shot in the left hand and treated at a local hospital and released. Robert Ray Neff, a white, was held as a suspect in the shooting.

Mayors Convene

DENVER (UPI)—The mayors of 400 of the nation's cities gather in Denver today to consider methods of cleaning the air, filling their coffers and calming social unrest.

The 1970 conference of mayors also was expected to hear a call for President Nixon to move ahead with his plan for a system of revenue sharing.

Sir Laurence Becomes A Lord

Olviier

LONDON (UPI) — British show business personalities walked away with the Queen's list of honors today, led by Sir Laurence Olivier who became the first actor to be dubbed a peer.

Queen Elizabeth, on her official birthday, named Olivier the first lord of the British theater and also gave royal orders to actor Richard Burton and television personality David Frost.

Burton was created a commander of the Order of the British Empire (O.B.E.), and Frost was made a member of the order.

Olivier was made a knight in 1947 by Elizabeth's father, King George VI. The peerage will give him a seat for life in the House of Lords.

By tradition, Olivier may now choose his own name, but friends said he would probably keep his own name, becoming Lord Olivier.

Other actors honored in today's list included Nyree Dawn Porter and Margaret Tyzack, who appeared in the international popular television series "The Forsyte Saga." They both received the O.B.E.

John Schlesinger, who directed the Academy Award winning film "Midnight Cowboy", was also presented with the Order of the British Empire.

Dame Sybil Thorndike, 87, was created a "companion of honor."

Cleric's Death Fulfills Rumors

Allen

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Even as his recorded voice reassured radio listeners. The Rev. A. A. Allen was alive and well, the faith healer and evangelist lay dead in a San Francisco hotel room.

Allen, 59, who built his ministry into a multimillion dollar business, died late Thursday of unknown causes. He was the founder and president of A. A. Allen Revivals, Inc., in Miracle Valley, Ariz.

A spokesman at Miracle Valley said it was "a strange coincidence" that on the day Allen died, radio stations throughout the country which carry his taped program were broadcasting Allen's recorded voice denying rumors of his death.

The dynamic and passionate preacher built his nondenominational Christian religious organization into a multimedia communications business. It sponsored Allen's frequent revival tours around the country, the daily radio program and a weekly television show.

It also publishes books on spiritual subjects and the monthly "Miracle Magazine" with a circulation of 350,000.

Funeral services and burial tentatively have been set for 1 p.m. Monday at Miracle Valley.

FLAG DAY REMINDER

The Pentagon released today this Marine Corps photo taken at Hill 119 in South Vietnam as a reminder that tomorrow is flag day. The battle scarred colors flutter as a helicopter brings supplies to the Marine outpost six miles west of Da Nang. (AP Wirephoto)

Marchers Promote Flag Day

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Thirteen labor leaders wearing hard hats and a group of local Elks Club members conducted a demonstration Friday on the state Capitol steps to promote Flag Day.

"It's publicity all the way through to get something in the paper that Sunday is Flag Day," explained Bill Richards, Americanism chairman for the North Central District of the Elks. "We're not getting involved in labor or anti-this or that."

The local labor leaders, dressed in business suits, stood on the steps while a man dressed as Uncle Sam walked toward them carrying the American Flag. He was followed by three Boy Scouts who distributed small flags to the labor men and the few spectators..

Richards said the hard hats were not worn in support of New York construction workers who attacked antiwar student demonstrators.

"It's a gimmick to call attention to Flag Day," he said. "We're trying to get people to talk and think about patriotism."

13, Including Judge, Face Stockton Counts

STOCKTON (UPI)—A grand jury has indicted 13 persons, including a prominent lawyer and a judge he is accused of bribing, in what investigators said was an attempt to loot a financial firm of 1.5 million.

Authorities said the name of the superior court judge involved would not be made public until arrangements were completed for his surrender on charges of accepting bribes.

Among the crimes charged Friday were grand theft, issuing checks with insufficient funds, bribing a financial officer and bribing a judge.

Gordon Rose, deputy attorney general, said thrift certificates, similar to certificates of deposit, were purchased from AVCO Thrift Co. with worthless checks, while some were stolen outright.

AVCO Thrift, a financial institution which is a subsidiary of AVCO Corp., actually did not lose all the money despite the fraudulent schemes, Rose said.

He said the FBI recovered many of the certificates, including one seizure of $600,000 worth in Nevada last March. Final loss to AVCO was estimated to be about $200,000.

In addition to the lawyer and judge, the indictments included businessmen and a bank president who is head of the Port Commission in this shipping and agricultural community 50 miles east of San Francisco.

Leonard Pores, 51, newly reelected to a four-year term as president of the port commission and president of the Stockton Bank of Agriculture and Commerce, was charged with conspiracy to pervert and obstruct justice and conspiracy to commit grand theft.

Attorney John Barkett, 35, was charged with bribing a judge and grand theft.

Joseph A. Broderick, 50, who has been fired as head of AVCO's Stockton office, was charged with being a financial officer who accepted bribes.

Rose said another AVCO branch manager, Frank Yaddow, 43, previously had been charged in a complaint with violating the financial code. He was not mentioned in the latest indictments.

"AVCO was extremely cooperative," said Rose in apparent reference to some financial institutions in similar situations who prefer to take their losses quietly to avoid public scandal.

Among the others indicted were:

Albert Weisinger, 61, co-owner of a Stockton fur shop, bribery and grand theft;

Gust Mazoros, 47, Hayward, bribery;

T.H. Rivers, 35, Orinda, conspiracy to commit grand theft and bribery of a financial officer;

Herbert A. Cox, 36, Los Angeles, conspiracy to bribe a financial officer and issuing worthless checks.

No other details were given in the indictments. Authorities said the names of the others indicted would not be made public until after they were arrested.

Kennedy Endorsed

AMHERST, Mass. (UPI)—Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was endorsed by acclamation for a second full term Friday by the State Democratic Convention and pledged to campaign for "the rebirth of the American dream."

State Sen. President Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke won a six-hour first ballot battle for the convention's gubernatorial endorsement over Boston Mayor Kevin H. White and former lieutenant governor Francis X. Bellotti. The convention also adopted a plank in its platform demanding an immediate return of U.S. servicemen from Indochina.

Senators Disagree On Budget Impact

SACRAMENTO (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee promises to try for a balanced 1970-71 state budget without a tax increase, but another senator says local taxes will have to go up if state spending for some programs is cut.

Sen. Donald Grunsky, R-Watsonville, said Friday he expected the Senate to quickly approve a heavily amended version of the Assembly budget bill Tuesday. The Senate amended the Assembly measure Friday to bring it into balance in the face of an unexpected $141 million deficit.

The Assembly failed to agree Thursday on ways to bring the budget back into balance, so it approved the original—and unbalanced—$6.48 billion proposal made by Gov. Reagan in February. That proposal was thrown out of balance by rising welfare and Medi-Cal costs and unexpectedly low tax revenues because of the cooling economy.

A Democratic senator who sits on the Finance Committee says it isn't possible to balance the budget without increasing the average taxpayer's total tax bill.

Sen. Stephen P. Teale, D-West Point, said major cuts in state spending would mean smaller state contributions to local governments.

"If local government wants to maintain its present level of services there will have to be a hike in the local tax rate to make up the difference in lost state funds," Teale said.

Teale was critical of the Republican governor, who he said "zeroed in on his favorite targets — higher education and welfare — as the places to find the money needed to balance the budget."

But Teale said the Senate Finance Committee, in deciding on a 1.6 per cent across-the-board cut to help balance the program, "rejected the idea of hitting education and the sick and the poor and decided instead on an across-the-board reduction . . . so that in effect everyone would suffer equally."

Assemblyman James W. Dent, R-Concord, commented Friday he didn't agree completely with the across-the-board cut "because so much money is tied up in programs which would require statutory changes before reductions could be made."

HIGH SPEED CRASH HURTS TWO

Corte Madera Patrolman Gregory Rossoff and tow truck driver Jim Wills view a battered 16-year-old model auto that overturned at high speed on the Highway 101 frontage road near Marin Joe's in Corte Madera early today. The crash, which occurred shortly before 3:30 p.m., sent the two occupants of the car, Louis Berry, 18, of 10 Fawn Lane, and Michael Brucoli, 17, of 940 Meadowsweet Drive, both Corte Madera, to Marin General Hospital. Berry was reported in poor condition today with facial cuts and chest injuries. Brucoli was treated for a bruised left leg.

The burglars also broke into the principal's office and ransacked a desk, but apparently took nothing, police said.

Asia Ballot Under Fire From Group

A November ballot measure in Marin urging Congress and the President to withdraw all American troops from Southeast Asia by June of 1971 drew fire yesterday from a group called Support Our Servicemen (SOS) Committee.

Raymond C. Kesner, chairman of SOS, asked for permission to speak Tuesday before the board of supervisors.

Supervisors last Tuesday decided to put on the Nov. 2 ballot a measure suggested by Anne West of San Anselmo. The measure would let citizens vote on whether they favored withdrawal of all troops by June of 1971.

"The measure as presently worded does not offer the voters a proper choice," declared Kesner. "We will propose a more positive measure that will offer the voters the choice of victory or surrender or to continue to fight a war with a no-win goal.

"It is a betrayal of the men who have fought and died in Southeast Asia to demand anything less than victory.

ning, 47, dean of Stanford University Law School; Revius O. Ortique Jr., 46, New Orleans attorney and former president of the predominantly Negro National Bar Association; Joseph Rhodes Jr., 22, a junior fellow at Harvard University.

An executive director of the commission staff will be named later.

Nixon said the chief purposes of the new commission are:

—"To identify the principal causes of campus violence, particularly in the specific occurrences of this spring.

—"To assess the reasons for breakdown in the processes for orderly expression of dissent.

—"To suggest specific methods and procedures through which legitimate grievances can be resolved.

—"To suggest ways to protect and enhance the right of academic freedom, the right to pursue an education free from improper interference, and the right of peaceful dissent and protest."

The president added: "It is my hope that the commission will help us discover what practical steps can be taken by all levels of government—including law enforcement agencies—to alleviate the dangers involved in this situation."

Clerics Rap Bruce Budget Cut Proposal

A group of 36 Marin county clergymen has protested County Administrator Alan Bruce's recommended cuts in the 1970-71 county budget for welfare programs, the human rights commission, the new careers program and the well-baby clinic.

The clergymen wrote an open letter to the supervisors yesterday opposing any efforts to abolish the new careers and human rights staffs or cut back welfare or clinic programs.

"We, as clergymen of Marin County, aware of the cost and problems of supporting low-income families, oppose the recommendation that supervisors discontinue the present level of supplementation," the letter said. (Because of Marin's high cost of living, the county provides supplementary grants to some welfare recipients.)

The clergymen asked supervisors to "join with us in supporting state legislation to increase the state participating base . . ."

Failure to do so, the ministers warned, would mean "increased problems of health, housing, malnutrition and crime" and would "adversely affect the general moral and spiritual health of the recipients and general public of Marin County.

The clergymen contended that "Marin County has one of the leading human rights commissions in the country, and it has succeeded through the efforts of a small but effective staff." They also said that the commission has brought $200,000 in grants to the county.

Rev. James Symons, pastor of St. Andrew United Presbyterian Church, Marin City, said clergy representatives will talk personally with each supervisor and will attend the public hearings on the proposed cuts.

The ministers will present to the supervisors petitions supporting the programs, Symons said.

Topless Ban Proposed For San Rafael

A proposed ordinance prohibiting "certain obnoxious conduct" — mainly topless and bottomless dancing — will be considered by the San Rafael City Council at its meeting Monday at 8 p.m.

The proposal is a result of plans by the Funny Farm bar at 813 Fourth Street to hire topless dancers and barmaids.

The council will also consider an amendment to the city's business license ordinance which would establish a procedure for licensing the business of conducting dances and other forms of entertainment.

An appeal of restrictions placed on a use permit for a public debris dump in the 1500 block of Jacoby Street will be before the council, as will plans for the landscaping of South San Pedro Road between Marina Boulevard and Lochinvar Road.

Prior to the meeting, the council will participate in the dedication of the American Legion foundation in front of city hall at 7:30 p.m.

Teen-Ager's Body Found On Shore

The body of a 13-year-old boy who vanished in the Dillons Beach surf three weeks ago was discovered washed ashore yesterday, the Marin coroner's office reported.

Deputy coroner Richard W. Madigan said two fisherman found the body of Roydean Pennington, son of Capt. and Mrs. James W. London of Travis Air Force Base, at about 10 a.m.

Madigan said Pennington and a classmate were running through the surf when they both fell into a shallow hole and were washed out. the other youth managed to swim to shore.

Pennington, on a science field trip from Crystal Junior High School in Suisun City when the accident occurred, had been the object of an intensive search by sheriff's deputies, the coast guard and residents.

Egg Vandal Hits San Rafael Cars

Sixteen San Rafael residents found their cars pelted with eggs yesterday.

Police reported that cars parged on Hoag and Canal streets were hit with eggs sometime before 3:30 a.m. yesterday.

An empty egg carton was found on Canal Street near the cars.

WELFARE

ment employment, adding there were many more welfare recipients in Marin taking part. But she added it applies only to welfare recipients and is designed to supplement low family income and at the same time afford work experience.

One Marin welfare aide, with one child, is getting $123 per month aid. This, together with the $451 county salary, brings her income to $574. The one receiving the most aid is a mother with eight children, who gets $333 per month, bringing her total income to $784.

Miss Presley said that because of the danger of high incomes, she would support limitations in the program.

The board of supervisors will discuss the issue Tuesday morning.

John D. Murphy, chairman of the Alameda County Board of Supervisors, has written a letter to the board asking Marin to join Alameda in a lawsuit to plug legal loopholes in welfare laws.

County Administrator Alan Bruce will recommend that Marin join in such litigation.

In one case in Alameda, a social worker was found to be receiving an annual salary of $10,100 plus alimony and child support of $3,600 and a $123-a-month stipend for the care of one child in a youth facility as a probation case.

WAR

units lost two men killed and three wounded, in another of a series of bitter clashes that have been going on for five days near the war-battered town of Mimot.

Another 4,000 South Vietnamese troops were reported withdrawn from Cambodia on Saturday, leaving what military sources said was a 30,000-man government force still there.

The disclosure came with just 17 days left for all U.S. troops to be withdrawn from Cambodia. At last count—on Monday—12,600 Americans still were reported inside Cambodia fighting enemy forces.

The U.S. Command, which refused for security reasons to say how many Americans still are in Cambodia, said in an updated casualty report 287 U.S. soldiers have been killed and 1,251 wounded since May 1 in Cambodia.

It also claimed that 3,938 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops have been killed in joint American-South Vietnamese operations against Communist command sanctuaries along the Cambodian border.

In South Vietnam, troops from the U.S. Americal Division reported killing 43 North Vietnamese on Friday in two clashes near Hiep Duc, in the much fought-over Que Son Valley 34 miles southwest of Da Nang.

Span Officials To Study Hiring

A committee of the Golden Gate Bridge District will meet at 9 a.m. Monday in the toll plaza offices to discuss the stalled hiring of H. Donald White as transportation maganger for the district.

District directors refused to approve the appointment Thursday when it was learned White wanted a host of office amenities, including a private car.

The special session of the joint transportation and finance-auditing committee also will delve into costs for remodeling the district's new ferryboat.

Fairfax Youth Wounds Hand

A 22-year-old Fairfax man was treated at Marin General Hospital today for a self-inflicted bullet wound in his left hand.

Jeffery L. Booker of 73 Broadway told police he was removing a .22 caliber pistol from his waistband when the weapon accidentally discharged at 2:15 a.m. outside the residence.

Officers said Booker told them he was carrying the pistol because he planned to target parctice in the San Geronimo Valley Area.

OBITUARIES

Elsie Morrison Dies At 71

Funeral for Elsie Morrison, 71, a retired San Rafael school teacher, will be Monday at 2:30 p.m. at Keaton's Mortuary, San Rafael.

Mrs. Morrison, of 16 Bayo Vista Way, San Rafael, died yesterday in a San Francisco hospital following a long illness.

A native of England, she came with her family to the United States and California in 1912. She attended San Diego Normal School and taught school in Southern California for two years.

She and her husband, Raymond, who survives, moved to Marin in 1937 when he was stationed at Hamilton Air Force Base. The couple moved to San Rafael in 1942. Mrs. Morrison taught at Sun Valley and West End schools for 12 years before retiring in 1959.

She was a member of the Women's Club of San Rafael, the Retired Teachers Association and the Republican Women's Club.

In addition to her husband, who is a retired Air Force lieutenant colonel, she is survived by two daughters, May Stoy of Denver and Jean Goodwin of Corte Madera and five grandchildren.

Burial will be at Mount Tamalpais Cemetery, San Rafael.

GEORGE WALTERS

George Lewis Walters, of 2449 Center Road, Novato, died yesterday at a local convalescent hospital following a long illness.

Walters, 54, was a machinist but had been disabled for the last 12 years.

A native of Portville, N.Y., he had lived in California 23 years and in Marin for 10. He was a veteran of World War II.

In addition to his wife, Ruth, he is survived by his mother, Myrna Walters of Olean, N.Y.; three brothers, William Walters of Bellingham, Wash.; Jack Walters of Olean, and Richard Walters of Redwood Valley, Mendocino County, and two sisters, Winifred Carr of Portville, N.Y., and Pauline Detry of Santa Susana, Ventura County.

Funeral will be Tuesday in Greenville, Pa., with burial at Shenango Valley Cemetery, Greenville. Friends may call at the Redwood Chapel Mortuary in Novato until 9 p.m. today.

EDWARD GREENBAUM

PRINCETON, N.J. (UPI)—Edward S. Greenbaum, top New York lawyer, court reformer and public servant, died Friday at Princeton Hospital. He was 80.

Greenbaum also was a personal confidant to Svetlana (Stalin) Alliluyeva, helping the way for the Soviet dictator's daughter to come to this country three years ago. He crossed swords with the Kennedy family in defending Harper & Row's right to publish William Manchester's book "The Death of a President."

In a legal career that spanned 57 years, Greenbaum called himself an "old-fashioned lawyer" who always sought out the human relationships imbedded in his business transactions. He succumbed after a long illness in this university community where he and his wife, Dorothea, moved in 1954 from New York.

He is survived by bis widow, a sculptor, two sons and four grandchildren. The funeral will be private, with a memorial service to be held at a later date.

EDWARD O'DOUL

Edward A. O'Doul, a longtime San Rafael resident and driver for Borden's Dairy, died yesterday in a local hospital following a long illness. He was 59.

A native of Tehama, O'Doul was raised in San Francisco and moved to San Rafael 22 years ago. He lived at 8 Harte Avenue.

O'Doul was a veteran of World War II and was a member of the Young Men's Institute, St. Raphael's Council No. 10 and Teamsters Union Local 264.

He is survived by his wife, Mary; a son, Thomas E. O'Doul of San Rafael; a brother, Joseph A. O'Doul of Whittier; two sisters, Viola Black and Maybelle Welch of San Francisco, and a grandson.

Requiem Mass will be offered Monday at 9:30 a.m. at St. Raphael's Church, San Rafael, with burial at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

The Rosary will be recited at 8 p.m. tomorrow at Keaton's Mortuary, with Young Men's Institute services to be conducted at 8:15 p.m.

The family requests memorial contributions to Hanna Boys Center, Sonoma, and the American Cancer Society.

HIGH SPEED CRASH HURTS TWO

Corte Madera Patrolman Gregory Rossoff and tow truck driver Jim Wills view a battered 16-year-old model auto that overturned at high speed on the Highway 101 frontage road near Marin Joe's in Corte Madera early today. The crash, which occurred shortly before 3:30 p.m., sent the two occupants of the car, Louis Berry, 18, of 10 Fawn Lane, and Michael Brucoli, 17, of 940 Meadowsweet Drive, both Corte Madera, to Marin General Hospital. Berry was reported in poor condition today with facial cuts and chest injuries. Brucoli was treated for a bruised left leg. (Independent-Journal photo) surprise, which "was so criticized here," was crucial.

Klein had general praise for American reporting on the war, which he said is "very difficult to cover." But he said he noticed several instances while in Cambodia that news coverage was inaccurate or irresponsible.

The journalistic society honored as its 1970 fellows Arthur Krock, retired Washington bureau chief and columnist for The New York Times, and Herbert L. Block (Herblock), the Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist for the Washington Post.

School Looters Get $700 Haul

Cash and office equipment valued at almost $700 has been taken from the main office of Bahia Vista School, 30 Bahia Vista Court, San Rafael, police reported today.

Police said the burglars entered the building through the back door of a classroom between 5 p.m. Thursday and 7:20 a.m. yesterday.

The burglars also broke into the principal's office and ransacked a desk, but apparently took nothing, police said.

Asia Ballot Under Fire From Group

A November ballot measure in Marin urging Congress and the President to withdraw all American troops from Southeast Asia by June of 1971 drew fire yesterday from a group called Support Our Servicemen (SOS) Committee.

Raymond C. Kesner, chairman of SOS, asked for permission to speak Tuesday before the board of supervisors.

Supervisors last Tuesday decided to put on the Nov. 2 ballot a measure suggested by Anne West of San Anselmo. The measure would let citizens vote on whether they favored withdrawal of all troops by June of 1971.

"The measure as presently worded does not offer the voters a proper choice," declared Kesner. "We will propose a more positive measure that will offer the voters the choice of victory or surrender or to continue to fight a war with a no-win goal.

"It is a betrayal of the men who have fought and died in Southeast Asia to demand anything less than victory.

ning, 47, dean of Stanford University Law School; Revius O. Ortique Jr., 46, New Orleans attorney and former president of the predominantly Negro National Bar Association; Joseph Rhodes Jr., 22, a junior fellow at Harvard University.

An executive director of the commission staff will be named later.

Nixon said the chief purposes of the new commission are:

—"To identify the principal causes of campus violence, particularly in the specific occurrences of this spring.

—"To assess the reasons for breakdown in the processes for orderly expression of dissent.

—"To suggest specific methods and procedures through which legitimate grievances can be resolved.

—"To suggest ways to protect and enhance the right of academic freedom, the right to pursue an education free from improper interference, and the right of peaceful dissent and protest."

The president added: "It is my hope that the commission will help us discover what practical steps can be taken by all levels of government—including law enforcement agencies—to alleviate the dangers involved in this situation."

Clerics Rap Bruce Budget Cut Proposal

A group of 36 Marin county clergymen has protested County Administrator Alan Bruce's recommended cuts in the 1970-71 county budget for welfare programs, the human rights commission, the new careers program and the well-baby clinic.

The clergymen wrote an open letter to the supervisors yesterday opposing any efforts to abolish the new careers and human rights staffs or cut back welfare or clinic programs.

"We, as clergymen of Marin County, aware of the cost and problems of supporting low-income families, oppose the recommendation that supervisors discontinue the present level of supplementation," the letter said. (Because of Marin's high cost of living, the county provides supplementary grants to some welfare recipients.)

The clergymen asked supervisors to "join with us in supporting state legislation to increase the state participating base . . ."

Failure to do so, the ministers warned, would mean "increased problems of health, housing, malnutrition and crime" and would "adversely affect the general moral and spiritual health of the recipients and general public of Marin County.

The clergymen contended that "Marin County has one of the leading human rights commissions in the country, and it has succeeded through the efforts of a small but effective staff." They also said that the commission has brought $200,000 in grants to the county.

Rev. James Symons, pastor of St. Andrew United Presbyterian Church, Marin City, said clergy representatives will talk personally with each supervisor and will attend the public hearings on the proposed cuts.

The ministers will present to the supervisors petitions supporting the programs, Symons said.

Topless Ban Proposed For San Rafael

A proposed ordinance prohibiting "certain obnoxious conduct" — mainly topless and bottomless dancing — will be considered by the San Rafael City Council at its meeting Monday at 8 p.m.

The proposal is a result of plans by the Funny Farm bar at 813 Fourth Street to hire topless dancers and barmaids.

The council will also consider an amendment to the city's business license ordinance which would establish a procedure for licensing the business of conducting dances and other forms of entertainment.

An appeal of restrictions placed on a use permit for a public debris dump in the 1500 block of Jacoby Street will be before the council, as will plans for the landscaping of South San Pedro Road between Marina Boulevard and Lochinvar Road.

Prior to the meeting, the council will participate in the dedication of the American Legion foundation in front of city hall at 7:30 p.m.

Teen-Ager's Body Found On Shore

The body of a 13-year-old boy who vanished in the Dillons Beach surf three weeks ago was discovered washed ashore yesterday, the Marin coroner's office reported.

Deputy coroner Richard W. Madigan said two fisherman found the body of Roydean Pennington, son of Capt. and Mrs. James W. London of Travis Air Force Base, at about 10 a.m.

Madigan said Pennington and a classmate were running through the surf when they both fell into a shallow hole and were washed out. the other youth managed to swim to shore.

Pennington, on a science field trip from Crystal Junior High School in Suisun City when the accident occurred, had been the object of an intensive search by sheriff's deputies, the coast guard and residents.

Egg Vandal Hits San Rafael Cars

Sixteen San Rafael residents found their cars pelted with eggs yesterday.

Police reported that cars parged on Hoag and Canal streets were hit with eggs sometime before 3:30 a.m. yesterday.

An empty egg carton was found on Canal Street near the cars.

WELFARE

ment employment, adding there were many more welfare recipients in Marin taking part. But she added it applies only to welfare recipients and is designed to supplement low family income and at the same time afford work experience.

One Marin welfare aide, with one child, is getting $123 per month aid. This, together with the $451 county salary, brings her income to $574. The one receiving the most aid is a mother with eight children, who gets $333 per month, bringing her total income to $784.

Miss Presley said that because of the danger of high incomes, she would support limitations in the program.

The board of supervisors will discuss the issue Tuesday morning.

John D. Murphy, chairman of the Alameda County Board of Supervisors, has written a letter to the board asking Marin to join Alameda in a lawsuit to plug legal loopholes in welfare laws.

County Administrator Alan Bruce will recommend that Marin join in such litigation.

In one case in Alameda, a social worker was found to be receiving an annual salary of $10,100 plus alimony and child support of $3,600 and a $123-a-month stipend for the care of one child in a youth facility as a probation case.

units lost two men killed and three wounded, in another of a series of bitter clashes that have been going on for five days near the war-battered town of Mimot.

Another 4,000 South Vietnamese troops were reported withdrawn from Cambodia on Saturday, leaving what military sources said was a 30,000-man government force still there.

The disclosure came with just 17 days left for all U.S. troops to be withdrawn from Cambodia. At last count—on Monday—12,600 Americans still were reported inside Cambodia fighting enemy forces.

The U.S. Command, which refused for security reasons to say how many Americans still are in Cambodia, said in an updated casualty report 287 U.S. soldiers have been killed and 1,251 wounded since May 1 in Cambodia.

It also claimed that 3,938 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops have been killed in joint American-South Vietnamese operations against Communist command sanctuaries along the Cambodian border.

In South Vietnam, troops from the U.S. Americal Division reported killing 43 North Vietnamese on Friday in two clashes near Hiep Duc, in the much fought-over Que Son Valley 34 miles southwest of Da Nang.

Span Officials To Study Hiring

A committee of the Golden Gate Bridge District will meet at 9 a.m. Monday in the toll plaza offices to discuss the stalled hiring of H. Donald White as transportation maganger for the district.

District directors refused to approve the appointment Thursday when it was learned White wanted a host of office amenities, including a private car.

The special session of the joint transportation and finance-auditing committee also will delve into costs for remodeling the district's new ferryboat.

Fairfax Youth Wounds Hand

A 22-year-old Fairfax man was treated at Marin General Hospital today for a self-inflicted bullet wound in his left hand.

Jeffery L. Booker of 73 Broadway told police he was removing a .22 caliber pistol from his waistband when the weapon accidentally discharged at 2:15 a.m. outside the residence.

Officers said Booker told them he was carrying the pistol because he planned to target parctice in the San Geronimo Valley Area.

OBITUARIES

Elsie Morrison Dies At 71

Funeral for Elsie Morrison, 71, a retired San Rafael school teacher, will be Monday at 2:30 p.m. at Keaton's Mortuary, San Rafael.

Mrs. Morrison, of 16 Bayo Vista Way, San Rafael, died yesterday in a San Francisco hospital following a long illness.

A native of England, she came with her family to the United States and California in 1912. She attended San Diego Normal School and taught school in Southern California for two years.

She and her husband, Raymond, who survives, moved to Marin in 1937 when he was stationed at Hamilton Air Force Base. The couple moved to San Rafael in 1942. Mrs. Morrison taught at Sun Valley and West End schools for 12 years before retiring in 1959.

She was a member of the Women's Club of San Rafael, the Retired Teachers Association and the Republican Women's Club.

In addition to her husband, who is a retired Air Force lieutenant colonel, she is survived by two daughters, May Stoy of Denver and Jean Goodwin of Corte Madera and five grandchildren.

Burial will be at Mount Tamalpais Cemetery, San Rafael.

GEORGE WALTERS

George Lewis Walters, of 2449 Center Road, Novato, died yesterday at a local convalescent hospital following a long illness.

Walters, 54, was a machinist but had been disabled for the last 12 years.

A native of Portville, N.Y., he had lived in California 23 years and in Marin for 10. He was a veteran of World War II.

In addition to his wife, Ruth, he is survived by his mother, Myrna Walters of Olean, N.Y.; three brothers, William Walters of Bellingham, Wash.; Jack Walters of Olean, and Richard Walters of Redwood Valley, Mendocino County, and two sisters, Winifred Carr of Portville, N.Y., and Pauline Detry of Santa Susana, Ventura County.

Funeral will be Tuesday in Greenville, Pa., with burial at Shenango Valley Cemetery, Greenville. Friends may call at the Redwood Chapel Mortuary in Novato until 9 p.m. today.

EDWARD GREENBAUM

PRINCETON, N.J. (UPI)—Edward S. Greenbaum, top New York lawyer, court reformer and public servant, died Friday at Princeton Hospital. He was 80.

Greenbaum also was a personal confidant to Svetlana (Stalin) Alliluyeva, helping the way for the Soviet dictator's daughter to come to this country three years ago. He crossed swords with the Kennedy family in defending Harper & Row's right to publish William Manchester's book "The Death of a President."

In a legal career that spanned 57 years, Greenbaum called himself an "old-fashioned lawyer" who always sought out the human relationships imbedded in his business transactions. He succumbed after a long illness in this university community where he and his wife, Dorothea, moved in 1954 from New York.

He is survived by bis widow, a sculptor, two sons and four grandchildren. The funeral will be private, with a memorial service to be held at a later date.

EDWARD O'DOUL

Edward A. O'Doul, a longtime San Rafael resident and driver for Borden's Dairy, died yesterday in a local hospital following a long illness. He was 59.

A native of Tehama, O'Doul was raised in San Francisco and moved to San Rafael 22 years ago. He lived at 8 Harte Avenue.

O'Doul was a veteran of World War II and was a member of the Young Men's Institute, St. Raphael's Council No. 10 and Teamsters Union Local 264.

He is survived by his wife, Mary; a son, Thomas E. O'Doul of San Rafael; a brother, Joseph A. O'Doul of Whittier; two sisters, Viola Black and Maybelle Welch of San Francisco, and a grandson.

Requiem Mass will be offered Monday at 9:30 a.m. at St. Raphael's Church, San Rafael, with burial at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

The Rosary will be recited at 8 p.m. tomorrow at Keaton's Mortuary, with Young Men's Institute services to be conducted at 8:15 p.m.

The family requests memorial contributions to Hanna Boys Center, Sonoma, and the American Cancer Society.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

'He Insists On Taking Golf Clubs On Our Honeymoon'

DEAR HELEN:

My boy friend and I have been disputing this since we started planning our honeymoon and we would like you to settle the argument for us.

He insists on taking his holf clubs with him on our honeymoon and I say he shouldn't. A vacation — yes, but not a wedding trip, which is for two people to do the things they mutually enjoy — and my feelings about golf are not exactly ecstatic.

What do you say? — FUTURE GOLF WIDOW

DEAR FGW:

How about a compromise? Tell your husband-to-be that you'll make room for the golf clubs — if he teaches you how to play golf on your honeymoon. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

I've been dating this boy for a year and three months. I love him very much but he treats me like a dog.

When I'm talking to him on the phone, he gets mad and calls me foul names, and if I start to cry he pushes the musical buttons down on his phone which he knows hurts my ears.

He wants to go out with other girls. I said okay, but now he says I have to tell a certain girl that we broke up so she'll date him.

But we're still going together. I said this wasn't fair to either of us and he really blew his top. He thinks lying is the easiest way out of things.

Outside of quitting him, how can I solve my problem? — SAN ANTONIO ROSE

DEAR ROSE:

I think your problem can only be solved by quitting him. Where's your pride? — H.

DEAR HELEN:

Students say that after the war is ended they will then protest pollution problems. Well, they can start right now: By picking up their cans, papers and garbage, and also cleaning up what others leave.

We were on a picnic Sunday, and each of us spent half an hour gathering all the old cans, bottles, and trash left by others. You can't believe the junk we picked up.

If everyone would do this, maybe a lot of ecology problems would be solved. — CATHERINE

DEAR CATHERINE:

Bravo!

Also — if everyone would put the flip-top tabs inside the cans before they begin to drink, a lot of first aid for cut feet would be eliminated. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

Maybe you won't print this, but I hope you do. Since our state is considering legalized abortion, I've done a great deal of studying on the subject.

An estimated one million abortions are performed in the U.S. each year. Only 8,000 are legal. Abortion is usually a safe, routine procedure, if done by a qualified doctor under sterile conditions. But incompetency and guesswork can cause injury and death. Some authorities believe illegal abortion is the major cause of death among pregnant women today.

Several recent court decisions have supported, at least in part, the view that many anti-abortion laws deny women their rights. Reformers agree it is the poor woman who has to pay, as safe abortions aren't available to them. The death rate from illegal abortion is 100 times higher among black and Puerto Rican women than among whites.

I am a sophomore and, like most of my peers, I'm very concerned with social problems. I'm definitely in favor of legalized abortions — and even more in favor of widespread birth control education that would make them unnecessary. — R.B.

CORINNE BOVAIRD

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Richard P. Bovaird of Novato are announcing the engagement of their daughter, Corinne Elizabeth, to Alfred Hoyt Guerrant, son of Dr. and Mrs. John S. Guerrant of Terra Linda.

Corinne is the sister of Cindy Bovaird, who is attending Chico State College, and Christy and Steven Bovaird. H. Robert Faltin of San Francisco and Mrs. E. M. Bovaird of San Mateo are her grandparents.

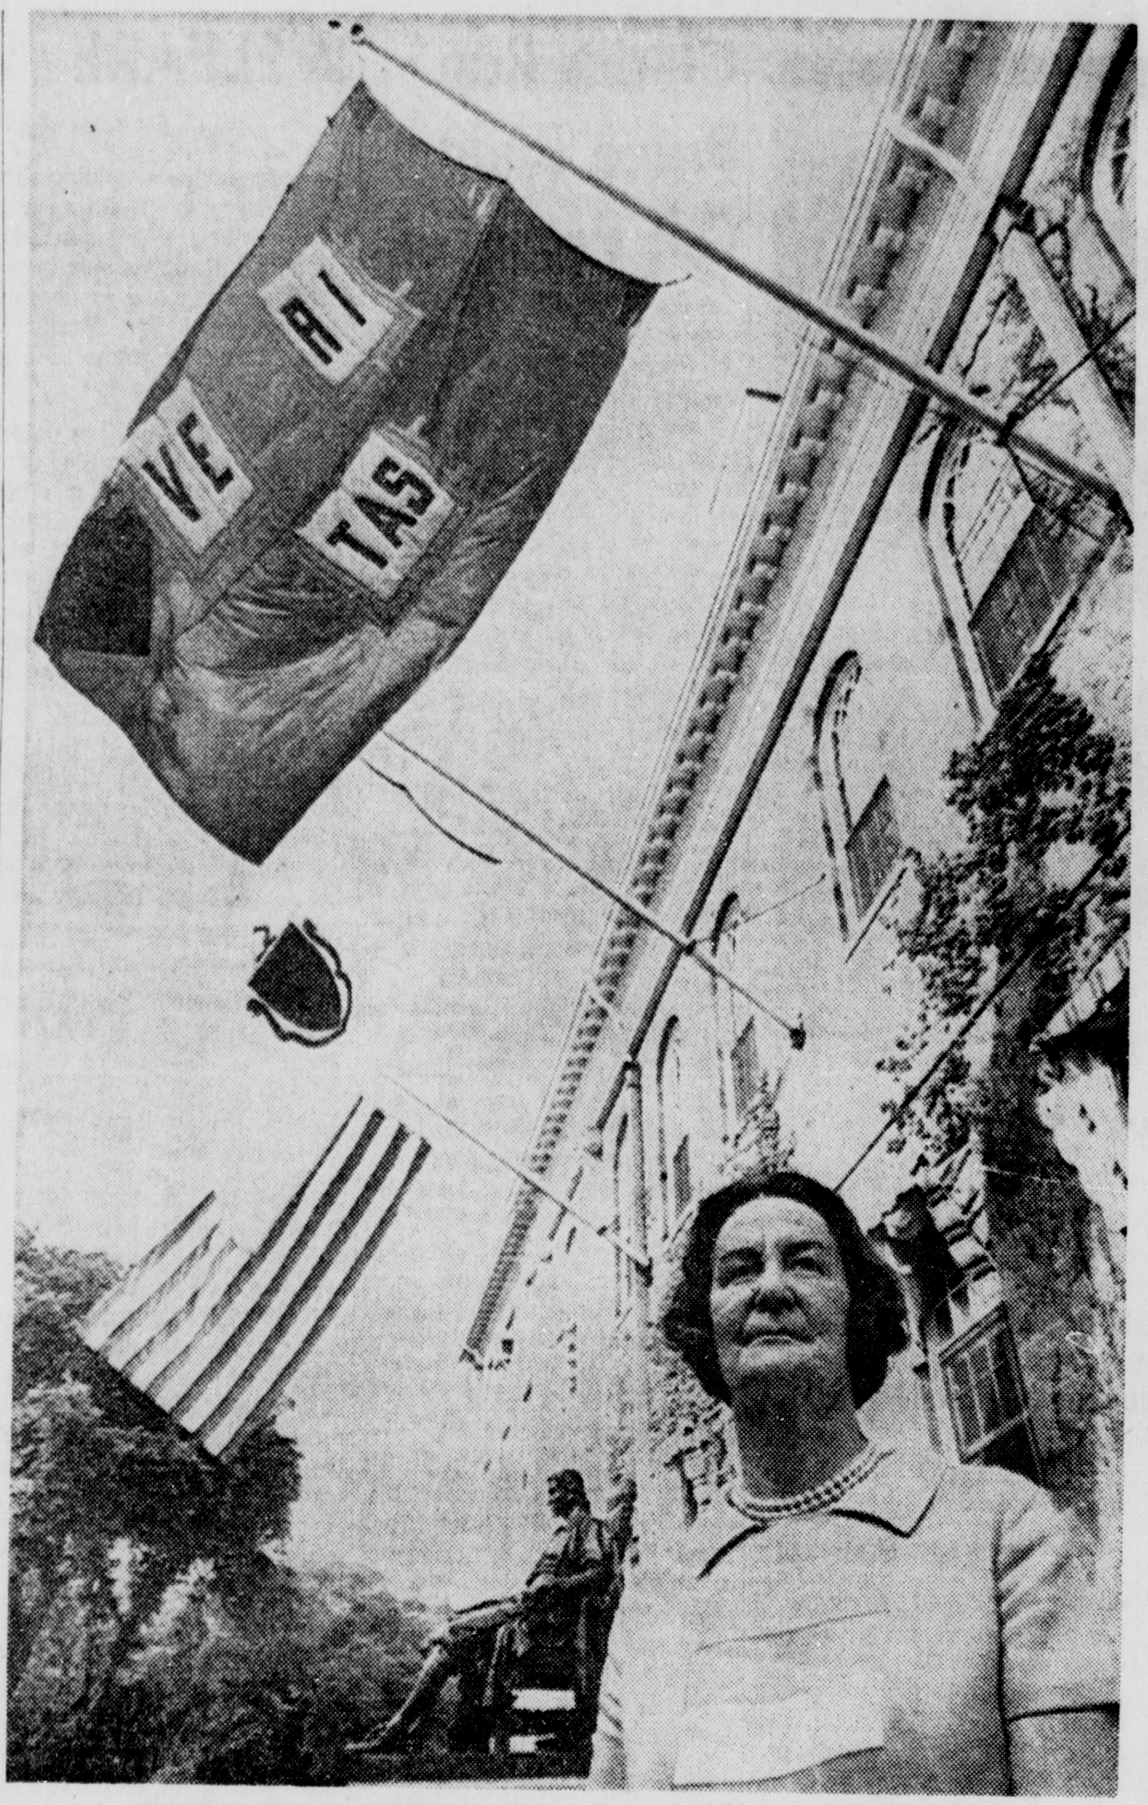
She was graduated from Novato High School and is attending College of Marin. She is employed with the Terra Linda Recreation and Park District.

Alfred is the brother of Susie Guerrant, attending college in Germany, and of John S. Jr. and David Guerrant. He was graduated from Terra Linda High School and is stationed with the Air Force at Randolph Air Force Base in Texas.

Force Discourages Musical Interest

Forcing a child to play the piano against his will is one of the surest ways to discourage his musical interest, says Constance Wagner, music education consultant.

"Be willing to compromise now and then," she says. "If your young virtuoso rebels against practicing at the usual after-school hour, for instance, propose a make-up session later in the evening or next morning before school. Give him the chance for bargaining power. He'll feel he's won the battle, but you'll have gained the long-range victory."



FIRST WOMAN IN 333 YEARS

Eva Nieto Will Lead Epsilon Zeta Chapter

EVA MARIA NIETO

Eva Maria Nieto of San Rafael is the new president of Epsilon Zeta Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma honorary society for women educators. During eight years of membership she has served as corresponding secretary and first vice president.

The society's purpose is to unite women educators and to honor those who have a potential for distinctive service in any field of education, according to the new president.

Born in Marfa, Tex., Miss Nieto received a bachelor's degree from Our Lady of the Lake College in San Antonio, Tex., and a master's degree from the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. She has lived in Marin and taught at Reed School for seven years and in September will begin a new teaching assignment at Granada School in Corte Madera.

The new president is also a member of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese and the California Council of Foreign Language Teachers Association. Her interests are traveling, attending operas and plays, taking home movies and editing them, recording and listening to semi-classical music and playing the piano.

SEW SIMPLE

Techniques Are Listed For Sewing With Knits

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR READERS,

Every day I get many letters asking about sewing with knits. I shall devote most of this week's column to many of the questions you have asked. I would suggest you file this away for future reference because sooner or later you will succumb to them.

Pattern selection is important. Since knits do have a lot of give, you will find that darts are not as important. Double knits, wool or polyester, tailor beautifully for suits, coats or dresses; single knits are perfect for softer, less tailored designs. Select simple patterns for loose knits or bold prints. Avoid bias cuts or circular skirts.

Cutting and Marking: If center fold line will not press out, refold fabric and avoid original fold line. Always work on a long, flat surface to avoid stretching fabric. Use sharp pins and shears to avoid snagging. Mark carefully with tailor's chalk, or tracing paper. Never use wax chalk, it will stain the fabric. For lightweight jersey, pin pattern on the wrong side to minimize curling.

Stitching: Seams must have give to prevent the thread from breaking. For polyester knits, it is recommended you use the polyester thread, set your machine for about 12 stitches per inch, pulling your fabric slightly as you stitch. Only stay-stick the shoulder, neckline and armhole; never stay-stitch the long seams. Seam finishes are not usually required since most knits do not ravel. To prevent seam allowances on lightweight single knits from rolling, stitch about ¼ inch from edge.

Pressing: Press lightly in lengthwise direction without stretching your fabric. Place strips of paper under the seam allowance of lightweight knits to prevent impressions on right side.

Inner construction: Knits require less inner construction than woven fabrics. Interfacings are very important in certain areas such as necklines, jacket or coat fronts, collars, cuffs, etc. Never choose an interfacing that is too stiff because it would change the hang of the fabric. A fusible interfacing works beautifully for hems of knits. I shall go into the explanation of fusibles in my next column.

Underlinings: Knits are usually not underlined because they keep their shape during wear and the underlinings would limit the give of the garment. If the knitted fabric is not high quality fabric, even the underlining would not prevent stretching out. If you wish a separate lining in your knits, attach only at the neckline and armholes, letting it hang loose inside. If you wish to line a coat, be sure to use a washable lining fabric if the garment can be washed.

Finishing touches: Be sure to stabilize the area under the buttonholes, whether they are bound or machine made to avoid stretching. Be sure the zipper you choose is flexible. Check to be sure trims are compatible with the knits for washing or dry cleaning.

Hems: Allow any knitted garment to hang at least 24 hours before hemming. It's best not to hand sew the edge of the fabric to your garment for the hem, instead fold back about ⅜ inch and loosely slip stitch the hem to your garment. Never pull the stitches too tight, the results would be a pulled and obvious line. Hem finishes such as tape, lace, or whatever, are not necessary but can be used for a decorative touch, the hem itself should still be turned back and slip stitched to the garment as explained above.

MRS. PEARL Romans, Louisville, Ky., is this week's winner of the Tailor Trix pressing board for her suggestion:

"I'm sure that most women who sew would like to experiment occasionally to see how a collar, cuffs or any other detail would look on a pattern they are making. I have found that cutting these details from quilted paper toweling works beautifully. You can sew right through it, adjust it in any way, and it's strong enough to withstand these changes without tearing. When you get it the desired size, it works perfectly for a pattern when you cut your fabric."

DEAR EUNICE,

I'm making a silk blouse that doesn't call for a facing; it is merely lined to the edge. It is necessary to use interfacing for this type of neckline and if so, how would I cut it without a pattern?

MRS. R.E.C.

DEAR MRS. R.E.C.

I find that most women stretch the neckline if they don't use an interfacing, and there's nothing worse than a neckline that is too large. The neckline is probably the most important of all areas to interface since the entire circle is on the bias.

If your pattern does not call for a facing, just use the pattern itself as a guide for cutting the interfacing. Use the neckline as your guide, making your interfacing about 3 inches deep. Pin and machine stitch it to the wrong side of your fabric, then apply your lining and the neckline of your dress will never stretch out of shape.

You will find it handy to have the free "Fabric Conversion Chart" in your purse when shopping. The chart tells you what amounts of fabric would be needed in other widths according to a given width. Send a stamped, self-addressed envelope with the request to Eunice Farmer in care of the Independent-Journal.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

'He Insists On Taking Golf Clubs On Our Honeymoon'

DEAR HELEN:

My boy friend and I have been disputing this since we started planning our honeymoon and we would like you to settle the argument for us.

He insists on taking his holf clubs with him on our honeymoon and I say he shouldn't. A vacation — yes, but not a wedding trip, which is for two people to do the things they mutually enjoy — and my feelings about golf are not exactly ecstatic.

What do you say? — FUTURE GOLF WIDOW

DEAR FGW:

How about a compromise? Tell your husband-to-be that you'll make room for the golf clubs — if he teaches you how to play golf on your honeymoon. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

I've been dating this boy for a year and three months. I love him very much but he treats me like a dog.

When I'm talking to him on the phone, he gets mad and calls me foul names, and if I start to cry he pushes the musical buttons down on his phone which he knows hurts my ears.

He wants to go out with other girls. I said okay, but now he says I have to tell a certain girl that we broke up so she'll date him.

But we're still going together. I said this wasn't fair to either of us and he really blew his top. He thinks lying is the easiest way out of things.

Outside of quitting him, how can I solve my problem? — SAN ANTONIO ROSE

DEAR ROSE:

I think your problem can only be solved by quitting him. Where's your pride? — H.

DEAR HELEN:

Students say that after the war is ended they will then protest pollution problems. Well, they can start right now: By picking up their cans, papers and garbage, and also cleaning up what others leave.

We were on a picnic Sunday, and each of us spent half an hour gathering all the old cans, bottles, and trash left by others. You can't believe the junk we picked up.

If everyone would do this, maybe a lot of ecology problems would be solved. — CATHERINE

DEAR CATHERINE:

Bravo!

Also — if everyone would put the flip-top tabs inside the cans before they begin to drink, a lot of first aid for cut feet would be eliminated. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

Maybe you won't print this, but I hope you do. Since our state is considering legalized abortion, I've done a great deal of studying on the subject.

An estimated one million abortions are performed in the U.S. each year. Only 8,000 are legal. Abortion is usually a safe, routine procedure, if done by a qualified doctor under sterile conditions. But incompetency and guesswork can cause injury and death. Some authorities believe illegal abortion is the major cause of death among pregnant women today.

Several recent court decisions have supported, at least in part, the view that many anti-abortion laws deny women their rights. Reformers agree it is the poor woman who has to pay, as safe abortions aren't available to them. The death rate from illegal abortion is 100 times higher among black and Puerto Rican women than among whites.

I am a sophomore and, like most of my peers, I'm very concerned with social problems. I'm definitely in favor of legalized abortions — and even more in favor of widespread birth control education that would make them unnecessary. — R.B.

CORINNE BOVAIRD

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Richard P. Bovaird of Novato are announcing the engagement of their daughter, Corinne Elizabeth, to Alfred Hoyt Guerrant, son of Dr. and Mrs. John S. Guerrant of Terra Linda.

Corinne is the sister of Cindy Bovaird, who is attending Chico State College, and Christy and Steven Bovaird. H. Robert Faltin of San Francisco and Mrs. E. M. Bovaird of San Mateo are her grandparents.

She was graduated from Novato High School and is attending College of Marin. She is employed with the Terra Linda Recreation and Park District.

Alfred is the brother of Susie Guerrant, attending college in Germany, and of John S. Jr. and David Guerrant. He was graduated from Terra Linda High School and is stationed with the Air Force at Randolph Air Force Base in Texas.

Force Discourages Musical Interest

Forcing a child to play the piano against his will is one of the surest ways to discourage his musical interest, says Constance Wagner, music education consultant.

"Be willing to compromise now and then," she says. "If your young virtuoso rebels against practicing at the usual after-school hour, for instance, propose a make-up session later in the evening or next morning before school. Give him the chance for bargaining power. He'll feel he's won the battle, but you'll have gained the long-range victory."

FIRST WOMAN IN 333 YEARS

Helen Homans Gilbert is the first woman named to Harvard's 333 year-old Board of Overseers. The Washington, D.C., woman was among five successful candidates in a mail ballot of all degree holders of the university. Here she stands in front of University Hall in Harvard Yard in Cambridge, Mass., where the board meets. The Harvard, Massachusetts and American flags fly above. In the background is the statute of John Harvard.

Eva Nieto Will Lead Epsilon Zeta Chapter

Eva Maria Nieto of San Rafael is the new president of Epsilon Zeta Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma honorary society for women educators. During eight years of membership she has served as corresponding secretary and first vice president.

The society's purpose is to unite women educators and to honor those who have a potential for distinctive service in any field of education, according to the new president.

Born in Marfa, Tex., Miss Nieto received a bachelor's degree from Our Lady of the Lake College in San Antonio, Tex., and a master's degree from the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. She has lived in Marin and taught at Reed School for seven years and in September will begin a new teaching assignment at Granada School in Corte Madera.

The new president is also a member of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese and the California Council of Foreign Language Teachers Association. Her interests are traveling, attending operas and plays, taking home movies and editing them, recording and listening to semi-classical music and playing the piano.

Clipped Wings To Install New Officers Tuesday At Luncheon

Clipped Wings, Marin Chapter will hold installation ceremonies for their 1970-1971 officers Tuesday in the Captain's Room of Sabella's restaurant. A no-host cocktail hour will begin at noon followed by a salad luncheon.

Mrs. Joseph Basso of Novato, will be installed as president of the Marin Chapter. To be installed with her are Mmes. Phillip Shivell of San Rafael , vice president; John Ehrmann of Novato, secretary; John Anderson of Novato, treasurer; John Brigham and Gery Gomez, both of San Anselmo, co-editors; and John Conway of Novato, delegate.

Committee chairmen are Mmes. Charles Hargraves of Tiburon, ways and means; David Graves of Novato, social; Robert Galloway of Novato, publicity; Sheldon Morris of Novato, national project; J. David Socash of San Rafael, local propect; Fred Ligarde of San Rafael, historian; Michael Woodson of Novato, recruitment; William Nay of San Rafael, programs and meetings; and John Mueller of Novato, parliamentarian.

THE SAN Rafael Junior Women's Club is having a luncheon meeting on Tuesday at West End Villa Restaurant in San Rafael. Guest of honor at the luncheon will be Mrs. Frank Verbeke, past president of the club. A social hour will start at 11:30 followed by lunch. Committee chairmen will be announced and plans will be made for the club's annual boutique, "The Tinsel Tree."

BELVEDERE — TIBURON Landmarks Society requests volunteers to staff Old St. Hilary's and help plan and arrange exhibits. The landmark and museum is open free to the public Sunday and Wednesday afternoons from April to October from 1 to 4 p.m.

A special program will be held on Wednesday at 2 p.m. on local history and botany. Botanist Mrs. George Ellman will conduct a tour of the four-acre preserve to point out the wildflowers in bloom. Mrs. David Teather, historian, is her co-chairman for the program.

Family Service League Elects New President

Mrs. Greig A. Gowdy of Mill Valley is serving as president of the Marin County Family Service League. She has been a league member for three years and previously held the office of recording secretary.

As an auxiliary of the Family Service Agency of Marin County, the league promotes and interprets the agency's activities and strengthens its work by active assistance, according to Catherine L. Gowdy.

Funds to support the FSA are raised by the league through a thrift shop in Mill Valley and the A. M. Program, a series of morning lectures. A. M. will begin its third season on Nov. 6 with actor Sebastian Cabot, and members are selling season tickets for the series.

Mrs. Gowdy says that membership in the league is open to anyone interested in family service.

The new president was born in San Diego. She attended Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash., and was graduated from the University of California with a B.A. degree in psychology. She is a research genealogist and has lived in Marin for four years.

MRS. GREIG GOWDY

Mrs. Gowdy enjoys bowling and recently won second place in the Marin County Tournament of Champions. Reading, music and her family occupy the rest of her time, she says. Her husband is an attorney, and they have two sons, Peter David, 6, and James Ryan, 22 months old.

Other league officers are Mmes. Donald Sandy, first vice president; Carlton Banigan, treasurer; Fred Burns, recording secretary; and John A. Hawkins, corresponding secretary.

Mrs. G. G. Gamlen is in charge of ticket sales for A. M., and Mrs. Curtis R. Richmond is membership chairman.

THE SUBURBAN SCENE

Marinites Racing To Tahiti

By MOLLY MARIN

Nicholas Bates of Belvedere will not be present when his brother Bink marries Sheila Jean Maley in Portland, Ore., on June 20. He will be on the high seas as part of the crew of the Numse II, San Francisco Yacht Club's contender in the world's longest yacht race: the Los Angeles to Tahiti International Yacht Race.

An all-Marin crew will be at sea 24 days on Dr. Maury Smith's yacht. The Belvedere neurosurgeon has chosen Nick Bates of Belvedere, Durk Noyes of Tiburon, Wink Smith, Jim McGinniss and Dave Hagen of Mill Valley to crew his Cal 40.

Nick and Durk will remain aboard the Numse II upon arrival at Papeete, Tahiti. The rest of the crew will fly home. Drs. Bert Richardson of Greenbrae and Jack Owsley of Sausalito will fly to Tahiti to join the crew for a cruise to American Samoa. The yacht will be shipped home and the crew will fly back to Marin the first week in August.

ADDED TO the summer calendar of parties for Marin debs is a luncheon and swimming party at the home of Mrs. Rene Vayssie in Atherton on Aug. 12. Mrs. Vayssie will honor her granddaughter, Nancy Vayssie of San Rafael.

MRS. ROSLYN C. Harris will become the bride of Francois Guillaume Leydet at her home in Kentfield tomorrow. A reception for the couple will follow in the garden at the home.

The bridegroom, a noted writer and conservationist, is the author of the Sierra Club books, "The Last Redwoods," and "Time and the River Flowing: Grand Canyon," and of many articles.

The couple plan to live in Kentfield.

MRS. JANE FORSTER of Fairfax received a surprise visit from her son, Don Forster, who is serving in the diplomatic service and has been in Vietnam for the past four years. Mr. Forster was en route to Washington, D.C., and plans to return to Marin for the month of July with his son, before he begins a new assignment in Miami.

NEW RESIDENTS of Greenbrae are Mr. and Mrs. James P. Mergens and their son, Jimmy, 16, and daughter Marilyn, 13. The family came from four years residence in Honolulu, where Mr. Mergens was director of the Aloha United Fund. He is now executive vice president of the United Bay Area Crusade.

FRED DAHL, 85, a resident of Mill Valley since 1946, is visiting his brother, Herman Dahl, 94, for a month in the village of Ostermaris on the island of Bornholm, Denmark, where both men were born. They had not seen each other in 57 years.

Mr. Dahl, who maintains his own home, has five children living, including three daughters in Marin, Mrs. Dorothy O'Brien and Mrs. Frank Hensel of Mill Valley and Mrs. Wallace Wick of Novato. He has 18 grandchildren and eight great grandchildren.

MRS. JAMES M. McKinnon of Sleepy Hollow became the bride of James Norman McLachlan of Winnepeg in an afternoon ceremony May 30 at St. Stephen's Church in Vancouver, B.C. Her daughter, Vicki McKinnon was her mother's honor attendant and Margot McLachlan was the bridesmaid.

John Sigurdsen of Vancouver served as best man and the ushers were James and Guy McLachlan. The bride's son, Bruce McKinnon, gave her in marriage.

The couple are living in Vancouver.

LIVING IN Limestone, Me., are Mr. and Mrs. Dan Steele, who were married May 11 at the chapel at Laring Air Force Base in Maine.

The bride is the former Mrs. Noella LeClere of New Brunswick, Canada. She is the mother of Lynn, Sylvia and Denise LeClere.

Dan is the son of Mrs. Emily Steele of San Anselmo and Danley A. Steele of Australia. His sisters are Mrs. Larry Ziaczewski and Mrs. William Hart, both of Napa, and Ruth Steele of San Anselmo.

THE DAN HAUSERMANS of Belvedere are very busy this week as they move their household and five of their children to their new home in Lake Tahoe and also plan the Edwardian-style wedding of their daughter, Julia, on June 21 to be held at the Mission on the University of Santa Clara campus.

A special program will be held on Wednesday at 2 p.m. on local history and botany. Botanist Mrs. George Ellman will conduct a tour of the four-acre preserve to point out the wildflowers in bloom. Mrs. David Teather, historian, is her co-chairman for the program.

Family Service League Elects New President

Mrs. Greig A. Gowdy of Mill Valley is serving as president of the Marin County Family Service League. She has been a league member for three years and previously held the office of recording secretary.

As an auxiliary of the Family Service Agency of Marin County, the league promotes and interprets the agency's activities and strengthens its work by active assistance, according to Catherine L. Gowdy.

Funds to support the FSA are raised by the league through a thrift shop in Mill Valley and the A. M. Program, a series of morning lectures. A. M. will begin its third season on Nov. 6 with actor Sebastian Cabot, and members are selling season tickets for the series.

Mrs. Gowdy says that membership in the league is open to anyone interested in family service.

The new president was born in San Diego. She attended Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash., and was graduated from the University of California with a B.A. degree in psychology. She is a research genealogist and has lived in Marin for four years.

Mrs. Gowdy enjoys bowling and recently won second place in the Marin County Tournament of Champions. Reading, music and her family occupy the rest of her time, she says. Her husband is an attorney, and they have two sons, Peter David, 6, and James Ryan, 22 months old.

MRS. GREIG GOWDY

Other league officers are Mmes. Donald Sandy, first vice president; Carlton Banigan, treasurer; Fred Burns, recording secretary; and John A. Hawkins, corresponding secretary.

Mrs. G. G. Gamlen is in charge of ticket sales for A. M., and Mrs. Curtis R. Richmond is membership chairman.

Marinites Racing To Tahiti

By MOLLY MARIN

Nicholas Bates of Belvedere will not be present when his brother Bink marries Sheila Jean Maley in Portland, Ore., on June 20. He will be on the high seas as part of the crew of the Numse II, San Francisco Yacht Club's contender in the world's longest yacht race: the Los Angeles to Tahiti International Yacht Race.

An all-Marin crew will be at sea 24 days on Dr. Maury Smith's yacht. The Belvedere neurosurgeon has chosen Nick Bates of Belvedere, Durk Noyes of Tiburon, Wink Smith, Jim McGinniss and Dave Haggen of Mill Valley to crew his Cal 40.

Nick and Durk will remain aboard the Numse II upon arrival at Papeete, Tahiti. The rest of the crew will fly home. Drs. Bert Richardson of Greenbrae and Jack Owsley of Sausalito will fly to Tahiti to join the crew for a cruise to American Samoa. The yacht will be shipped home and the crew will fly back to Marin the first week in August.

ADDED TO the summer calendar of parties for Marin debs is a luncheon and swimming party at the home of Mrs. Rene Vayssie in Atherton on Aug. 12. Mrs. Vayssie will honor her granddaughter, Nancy Vayssie of San Rafael.

MRS. ROSLYN C. Harris will become the bride of Francois Guillaume Leydet at her home in Kentfield tomorrow. A reception for the couple will follow in the garden at the home.

The bridegroom, a noted writer and conservationist, is the author of the Sierra Club books, "The Last Redwoods," and "Time and the River Flowing: Grand Canyon," and of many articles.

The couple plan to live in Kentfield.

MRS. JANE FORSTER of Fairfax received a surprise visit from her son, Don Forster, who is serving in the diplomatic service and has been in Vietnam for the past four years. Mr. Forster was en route to Washington, D.C., and plans to return to Marin for the month of July with his son, before he begins a new assignment in Miami.

NEW RESIDENTS of Greenbrae are Mr. and Mrs. James P. Mergens and their son, Jimmy, 16, and daughter Marilyn, 13. The family came from four years residence in Honolulu, where Mr. Mergens was director of the Aloha United Fund. He is now executive vice president of the United Bay Area Crusade.

FRED DAHL, 85, a resident of Mill Valley since 1946, is visiting his brother, Herman Dahl, 94, for a month in the village of Ostermaris on the island of Bornholm, Denmark, where both men were born. They had not seen each other in 57 years.

Mr. Dahl, who maintains his own home, has five children living, including three daughters in Marin, Mrs. Dorothy O'Brien and Mrs. Frank Hensel of Mill Valley and Mrs. Wallace Wick of Novato. He has 18 grandchildren and eight great grandchildren.

MRS. JAMES M. McKinnon of Sleepy Hollow became the bride of James Norman McLachlan of Winnepeg in an afternoon ceremony May 30 at St. Stephen's Church in Vancouver, B.C. Her daughter, Vicki McKinnon was her mother's honor attendant and Margot McLachlan was the bridesmaid.

John Sigurdsen of Vancouver served as best man and the ushers were James and Guy McLachlan. The bride's son, Bruce McKinnon, gave her in marriage.

The couple are living in Vancouver.

LIVING IN Limestone, Me., are Mr. and Mrs. Dan Steele, who were married May 11 at the chapel at Laring Air Force Base in Maine.

The bride is the former Mrs. Noella LeClere of New Brunswick, Canada. She is the mother of Lynn, Sylvia and Denise LeClere.

Dan is the son of Mrs. Emily Steele of San Anselmo and Danley A. Steele of Australia. His sisters are Mrs. Larry Ziaczewski and Mrs. William Hart, both of Napa, and Ruth Steele of San Anselmo.

THE DAN HAUSERMANS of Belvedere are very busy this week as they move their household and five of their children to their new home in Lake Tahoe and also plan the Edwardian-style wedding of their daughter, Julia, on June 21 to be held at the Mission on the University of Santa Clara campus.

CIRCUS SCENES — Children of prison employees watch the show from ringside, after the warden spotted them wistfully peering from a hillside outside the fence and invited them in to join the convict audience. There were no incidents yesterday as the spectators cheered the traditional glittery acts including this trick bike performance (below).

Circus Hoopla Brightens Life For Quentin Inmates

The mood was bright as the clowns' costumes yesterday as more than 2,100 San Quentin Prison inmates filed into the athletic field bleachers to watch the circus.

Amid the laughter and bantering, one could almost forget that the spectators were wearing prisoners' blue denim and that the wall behind the circus trucks and tents was patrolled by armed guards.

The circus was the second ever held at the prison, and it included all the trimmings usually associated with the big top.

Inmates could buy hot dogs, cotton candy, snow cones and pink lemonade, which were even given away to some prisoners who could not afford to buy them. An amnesty allowed inmates to use U. S. currency, which is forbidden in the prison, as well as the normal prison canteen coupons.

More than $70 in contraband U. S. currency, used for dope traffic and other illegal trade in prisons, was taken in.

There were six animal acts, acrobats, a trapeze act, high wire performers, pretty girls and clowns in the show. Most enthusiastically received acts were the lion and tiger tamer and the high wire act, but the loudest applause came at the start of the show when inmate Vic Curcio was commended for helping bring the show to San Quentin.

Curcio, 49, originated the idea of bringing a circus to San Quentin several years ago, got the warden's permission and wrote letters to circuses until the Rudy Brothers circus agreed to put on a show last year. The same circus presented this year's program.

Children of resident prison employees were allowed to attend the circus this year for the first time, and many employees were observed both in groups by themselves and mingling and talking with the prisoners. The inmates' behavior would compare favorably with many adult-entertainment audiences on the outside.

Expressions of the crowd during the show varied from intent concentration during the more difficult performances to uproarious laughter when a clown ribbed one of the inmates during his act.

Attractive women performers brought whistles, cheers and catcalls. When a beautiful brunette appeared in the unicycle balance act, a slender baby-faced convict of about 30 breathed, "Oh man, I don't wanna look but I gotta."

Leaving after the show, the inmates walked slowly and talked little as they returned to the prison routine.

Battery Case Brings Jail And Probation

Thomas William McGrath, 56, of Tiburon, yesterday was placed on probation for two years and ordered to spend 10 days in jail by Judge Peter Allen Smith of Marin Municipal Court for a charge of battery against his wife.

McGrath was arrested March 1 after he called sheriff's deputies to say that he had tried to choke his wife. Mrs. McGrath apparently suffered only minor injuries.

Nursing Alumni Blast College In Resignation

In the aftermath of the resignation of College of Marin's nursing education coordinator, the schools' nursing alumni have spelled out problems they believe led to her resignation and what the college should do to resolve them.

In a letter to John A. Grasham, superintendent-president of the college, the registered nurses' alumni association said the college was lax in letting problems arise which led Shirley Conklin to resign her post.

The association asked that "steps be taken to rectify the breakdown in communications and the . . . delay of decision.

In choosing a successor, the association urged combining all health studies program into one unit under a single administrator, and urged that the nursing faculty help choose the new head.

The two-and-a-half-year shuffle which led to Miss Conklin's resignation "seems inconceivable," wrote Barbara Bunn, president of the association.

The association questioned four aspects of the situation:

"Why the coordinator was allowed to function without a contract and . . . a defined job description for . . . one year.

"Why there is administrative controversy concerning the . . . job description.

"Why grievances have not been resolved at the proper level of the college's . . . structure.

"Why no steps have been taken to unify the various health studies, as formerly planned, into one health occupations unit."

Miss Conklin, a nationally recognized nursing educator, resigned in March, citing the uncertainty of her status as the reason.

When hired in 1964, she was to head a combined health services department, but the college later decided not to combine them. It was then proposed that Miss Conklin be placed on the faculty salary schedule instead of administrative — in effect, a downgrading of her post, with her salary to be frozen until faculty levels reached her current salary.

That proposal disappeared into the limbo of committee studies and never emerged. After more than a year, Miss Conklin submitted her resignation.

Probation, Jail Set In Family Quarrel

Robert Christie McCulla, 47, of San Francisco, yesterday was placed on probation for one year and sentenced to 15 days in jail in Marin Municipal Court on a misdemeanor charge of beating his estranged wife, Yvonne, at her San Rafael home on March 4.

Mrs. McCulla suffered a broken nose and facial cuts.

Suspect Bound Over

Clifford T. Van Pelt, 52, of San Francisco, yesterday was bound over the Marin Superior Court on two felony counts of indecent exposure stemming from incidents at Stinson State Beach Park May 16. He is to be arraigned Monday.

Tear Gas Device Is Denied In Muni Court

Gary Lee Yoder, 24, of San Francisco, pleaded innocent yesterday in Marin Municipal Court to a charge of carrying a tear gas device. A preliminary hearing was set for June 30.

Yoder was arrested June 4 in Inverness after being stopped for speeding. A check revealed that he had an outstanding warrant, and a search produced a tear gas container which Yoder said he had bought for self-protection.

College Of Marin Trustees Face Many Meetings

Marin Junior College District trustees may spend most of their summer in meetings.

The district board has scheduled five special meetings as well as the four regular meetings during June, July and August, to complete the 1970-71 budget, discuss long-range financing, develop a financial proposal for the November election, plan the north campus site and discuss updating the district's computer equipment.

Regular meetings will be held at 8 p.m. in Olney Hall on Thursday, July 1, July 16 and Aug. 20.

Special meetings and their topics will be:

Monday at 8 p.m. — Salary proposals for 1970-71 and budgets for the art, drama and music departments.

At 8 p.m. June 22 — Long-range financing and the November ballot proposal.

At 8 p.m. June 25 — Educational concepts for the north campus.

At 8 p.m. July 6 — Computer updating.

At 8 p.m. Aug. 6 — Public hearing and adoption of the 1970-71 budget.

Place for the special meetings has not been set.

Not Very Dry

FRANKFORT, Ky. (UPI)— State Alcoholic Beverage Control agents raided three "dry" counties and turned up 4,175 cans of beer, 1,967 bottles of whisky and seven gallons of moonshine.

Sausalito Merchants Suing Over Planters

A group of Sausalito businessmen who went to court Thursday to force the Sausalito City Council to remove the sandbags on two blocks of Bridgeway went to court again yesterday to force the council to remove the planter boxes which yesterday replaced the sandbags.

Thirteen owners and operators of stores on Broadway between Anchor and Princess streets filed suit in Marin Superio Court asking for a writ of mandate to force the council to remove the planters.

They claimed that the planters are a public nuisance and are damaging their business. They also said the planters intrude into the public right-of-way.

The planters replaced the sandbags which were placed along the two blocks to enforce a parking ban along the street.

Merchants who brought the suit were Harold Hobbs, Gene Hiller, Fred Saebel, Frederick S. Mayer, Jon Waycott, Gerald Olson, Joyce M. Curry, Ruby Cullinan, Dorothy Fritter, Richard E. Mackes, Rosemary Russell, Wayne Hauner and Harold Puharich.

They are represented by attorney Gordon C. Wright of San Francisco. No hearing date on the writ has been set.

Racing Pigeons Still Missing

Three racing pigeons stolen last Sunday from a Terra Linda man were still missing yesterday.

Alfred E. Boccone of 3 Wintergreen Terrace said that two of his prize birds had been replaced in the loft from which they had been taken.

Boccone warned the thief that the pigeons are registered and cannot be easily sold.

Dance Troupe Known As Gaia Company

The Independent-Journal erred yesterday in referring to the Gaia Company Dance Theater directed by Sheri Gaia as the Sherri Gaya Dance Company.

The group will repeat a modern jazz and rock ballet interpretation of "Scarlet Letter" at 8 p.m. today at Sir Francis Drake High School's Little Theater.

College Of Marin Trustees Face Many Meetings

Marin Junior College District trustees may spend most of their summer in meetings.

The district board has scheduled five special meetings as well as the four regular meetings during June, July and August, to complete the 1970-71 budget, discuss long-range financing, develop a financial proposal for the November election, plan the north campus site and discuss updating the district's computer equipment.

Regular meetings will be held at 8 p.m. in Olney Hall on Thursday, July 1, July 16 and Aug. 20.

Special meetings and their topics will be:

Monday at 8 p.m. — Salary proposals for 1970-71 and budgets for the art, drama and music departments.

At 8 p.m. June 22 — Long-range financing and the November ballot proposal.

At 8 p.m. June 25 — Educational concepts for the north campus.

At 8 p.m. July 6 — Computer updating.

At 8 p.m. Aug. 6 — Public hearing and adoption of the 1970-71 budget.

Place for the special meetings has not been set.

Not Very Dry

FRANKFORT, Ky. (UPI)—State Alcoholic Beverage Control agents raided three "dry" counties and turned up 4,175 cans of beer, 1,967 bottles of whisky and seven gallons of moonshine.

Sausalito Merchants Suing Over Planters

A group of Sausalito businessmen who went to court Thursday to force the Sausalito City Council to remove the sandbags on two blocks of Bridgeway went to court again yesterday to force the council to remove the planter boxes which yesterday replaced the sandbags.

Thirteen owners and operators of stores on Broadway between Anchor and Princess streets filed suit in Marin Superio Court asking for a writ of mandate to force the council to remove the planters.

They claimed that the planters are a public nuisance and are damaging their business. They also said the planters intrude into the public right-of-way.

The planters replaced the sandbags which were placed along the two blocks to enforce a parking ban along the street.

Merchants who brought the suit were Harold Hobbs, Gene Hiller, Fred Saebel, Frederick S. Mayer, Jon Waycott, Gerald Olson, Joyce M. Curry, Ruby Cullinan, Dorothy Fritter, Richard E. Mackes, Rosemary Russell, Wayne Hauner and Harold Puharich.

They are represented by attorney Gordon C. Wright of San Francisco. No hearing date on the writ has been set.

Racing Pigeons Still Missing

Three racing pigeons stolen last Sunday from a Terra Linda man were still missing yesterday.

Alfred E. Boccone of 3 Wintergreen Terrace said that two of his prize birds had been replaced in the loft from which they had been taken.

Boccone warned the thief that the pigeons are registered and cannot be easily sold.

Dance Troupe Known As Gaia Company

The Independent-Journal erred yesterday in referring to the Gaia Company Dance Theater directed by Sheri Gaia as the Sherri Gaya Dance Company.

The group will repeat a modern jazz and rock ballet interpretation of "Scarlet Letter" at 8 p.m. today at Sir Francis Drake High School's Little Theater.

HOW TO PLAY

WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

How Politicking Can Pay Off With Your Bridge Plays

There is still time for shrewd politicians to get on the bandwagon. A man who can pass a low prohibiting the loss of three finesses in one hand would win any election among bridge players. He'd get the vote of today's declarer.

TRUMP ROUND

South won the first trick and drew another round of trumps. Then he led the jack of diamonds for the first losing finesse. Back came the queen of hearts, and South put up the king for a second losing finesse. And in the cool of the evening South had to try the club finesse and lost that too. Down one.

Just a minute, before you dash off to the local political club. You don't need an act of Congress to make four spades on this kind of hand. All you need is the ability to choose the right kind of diamond finesse.

LEAD FROM DUMMY

After drawing two rounds of trumps, ending in the dummy, lead a low diamond from dummy toward your jack. If East happens to have the king he must play it or lose his diamond trick. Then he can get two heart tricks, but you can cash the jack of diamonds and discard two clubs on the ace and queen of diamonds.

If West has the king of diamonds, he captures your jack. But then the defenders cannot lead through your king of hearts.

CASH DIAMONDS

If West leads a club, you put up dummy's ace and cash the high diamonds to get rid of a heart. All you can lose is one heart, one diamonds and one club.

If you want to get the bridge-playing vote, forget about finesses. Just abolish the number 1400. You might even get my vote for that one.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid three hearts.

You have nine points in high cards and three points for the singleton, a total of 12 points. You need 13 points for the jump to three hearts, but you might want to count 1 extra point for the queen or jack (or both) of partner's suit or for three tens or even just for luck. The jump raise is the best description of your hand.

Church Plans Day Camp For Bible School

The First Baptist Church of Mill Valley has abandoned the traditional two-week vacation bible school in favor of a day camp at Paradise Park, Tiburon.

Children from kindergarten age through eighth grade may register for the five-day session by attending the first class Monday at 9:30 a.m. at the park.

Parents may bring their children to the church, 285 Miller Avenue, at 9:15 each morning through next Friday for bus transportation to the camp, or take them directly to the park.

Campers should bring sack lunches. Soft drinks will be provided.

The session will end June 19 with a children's day service at 11 a.m.

How Politicking Can Pay Off With Your Bridge Plays

There is still time for shrewd politicians to get on the bandwagon. A man who can pass a low prohibiting the loss of three finesses in one hand would win any election among bridge players. He'd get the vote of today's declarer.

TRUMP ROUND

South won the first trick and drew another round of trumps. Then he led the jack of diamonds for the first losing finesse. Back came the queen of hearts, and South put up the king for a second losing finesse. And in the cool of the evening South had to try the club finesse and lost that too. Down one.

Just a minute, before you dash off to the local political club. You don't need an act of Congress to make four spades on this kind of hand. All you need is the ability to choose the right kind of diamond finesse.

LEAD FROM DUMMY

After drawing two rounds of trumps, ending in the dummy, lead a low diamond from dummy toward your jack. If East happens to have the king he must play it or lose his diamond trick. Then he can get two heart tricks, but you can cash the jack of diamonds and discard two clubs on the ace and queen of diamonds.

If West has the king of diamonds, he captures your jack. But then the defenders cannot lead through your king of hearts.

CASH DIAMONDS

If West leads a club, you put up dummy's ace and cash the high diamonds to get rid of a heart. All you can lose is one heart, one diamonds and one club.

If you want to get the bridge-playing vote, forget about finesses. Just abolish the number 1400. You might even get my vote for that one.

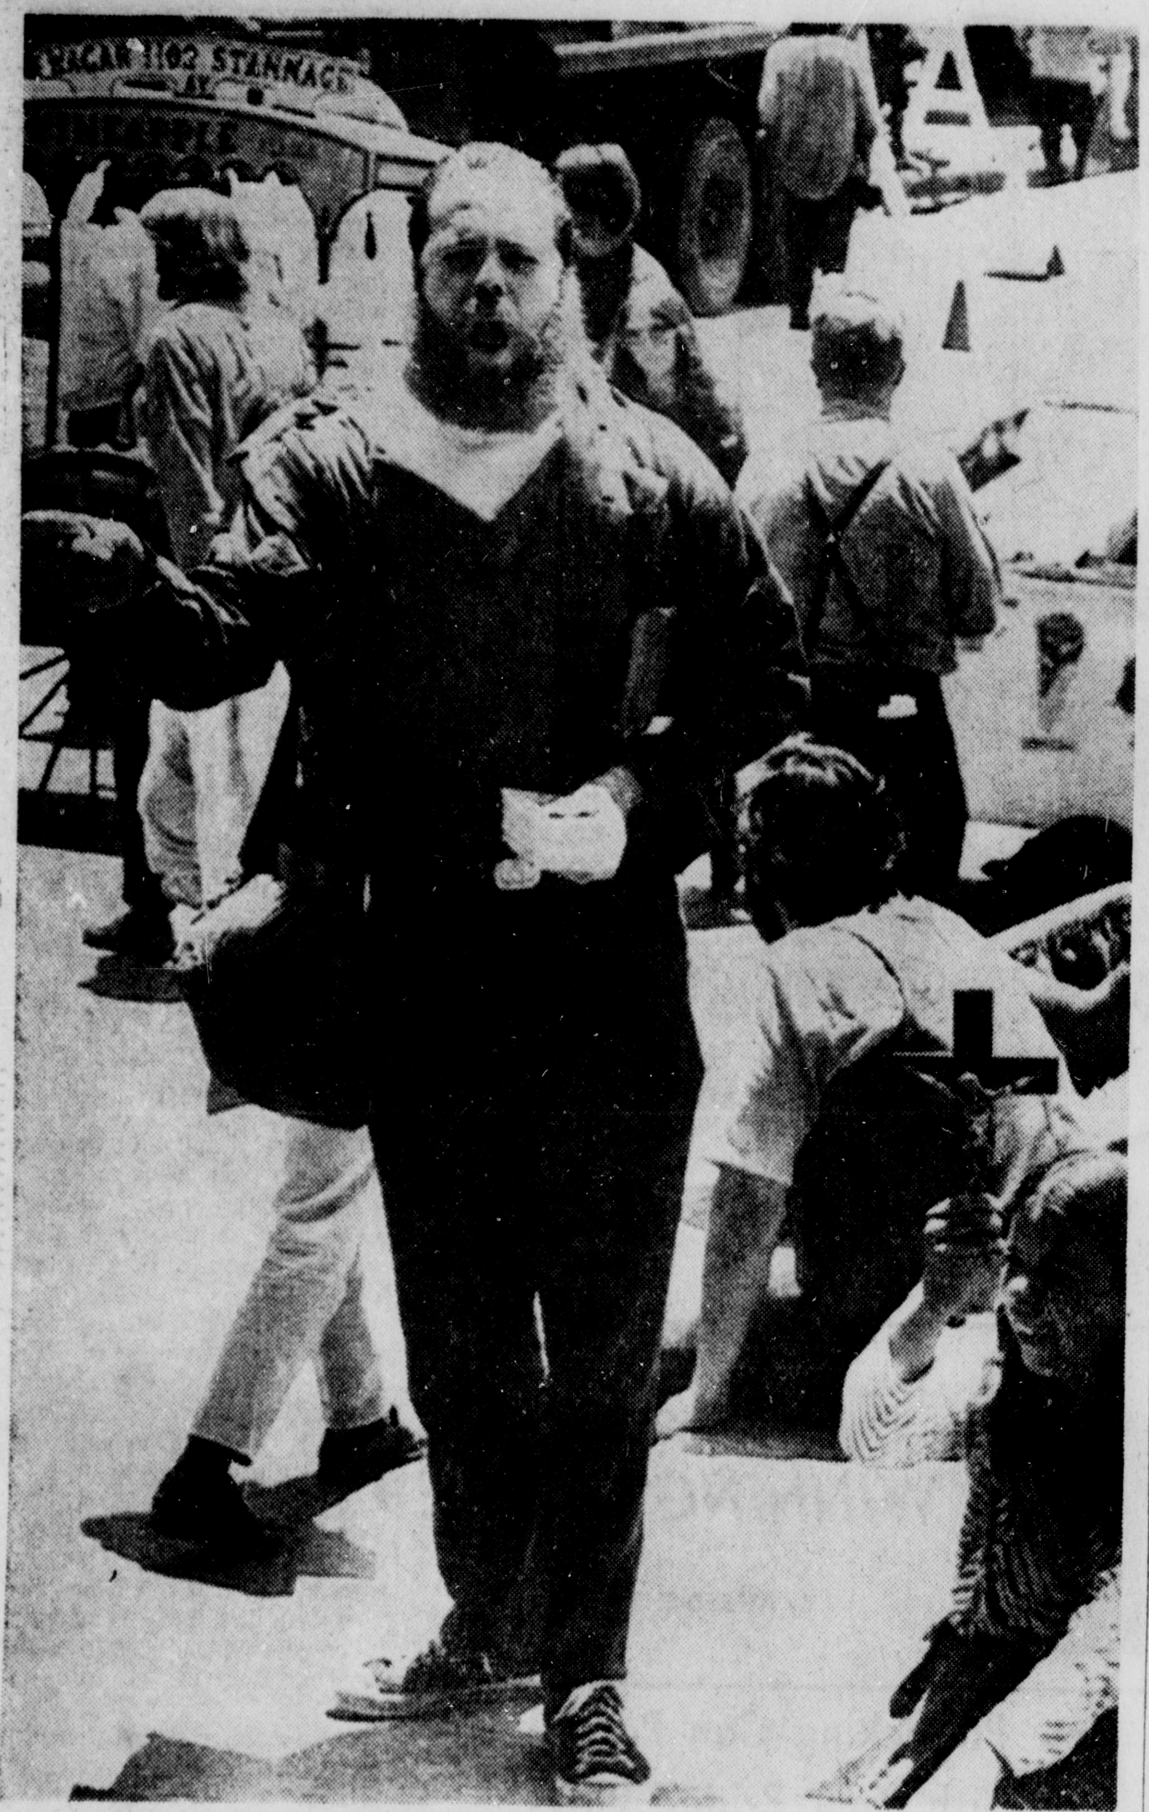
Bridegroom Gets In Trouble Right Away

TORQUAY, England (UPI)— A judge placed Brian Weekes on two years probation when Weekes explained why he neglected to pay the hotel bill on his honeymoon.

Weekes said he had started married life with only 30 shillings in his wallet and was too proud to ask his bride for money. So he fled the hotel secretly—also leaving behind his new Missus, who took it so unkindly she has separated from him.



A CALLING—With a Bible under his arm, Galen Craig, one of the people known around the University of California campus at Berkeley as "Jesus Freaks," attempts to interest passersby. He also is carrying a supply of religious literature which he distributes to people on the street. Girl at right holding a cross is unidentified. (AP Wirephoto)

CALLING IN BERKELEY

They Gladly Accept The Name Of 'Jesus Freaks'

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — As they put it, they've been "turned on by Jesus." And things seem different. Most of them are hippies. Others are "straight" kids. In either case, they're making their presence felt around the University of California campus here.

They're called "Jesus Freaks," a term originally applied in derision, but which they gladly accept. After all, the term, "Christian" itself originally was used in pagan mockery of the early believers in Christ.

"Jesus is back!" said a tall, barefoot, long-haired lad, handing out evangelical tracts to passing students. "Take a trip with the Lord—it's the greatest."

Here and there about the campus, on class days and weekends, it's easy to spot these special kind of radicals in clusters of youths, "rapping" about Jesus in arguments with assorted New Left advocates.

Wherever the "Jesus Freaks" hold forth, there's usually a sizable crowd. "One way! One way!" they signal about Christ, with a single finger held aloft, instead of the "V"-peace-victory sign.

Regularly, they also make forays into downtown San Francisco, displaying their signs, "Jesus Saves," and speaking on sidewalks outside the "skin" bars featuring nude dancers.

"I've been through 'grass', the heavyweight stuff, LSD and speed, and all the meditation-breathing bit, and it just freaked me out and down," said one of them, a thin, bearded young man. "But Jesus is very true, very hip, very with it. He's our thing."

Others tell similar stories of having been through drugs and Oriental mysticism before finding greater satisfaction in "following Jesus."

Formally, the "Jesus Freaks" are known as the Christian World Liberation Front. They began appearing around Berkeley about a year ago, adding a new element to a campus of 28,000 students known for its tumults and radical movements—Marxists, Maoists, Free-Speech'ers,, was resisters.

The "Jesus Freaks" also are anti-Vietnam War and generally antiestablishment, even antichurch so far as the official institutiones, claiming it has become stuffy, stiff and lost its sense of the "Spirit," the mysteries and joy.

"The straight church is too uptight," said one young man in black pullover shirt, beads and striped pants. "But Jesus is a real revolutionary, a man of the people."

There are no regularly kept statistics on the "Jesus Freaks," but estimates are that 300 to 400 of them are active here, and the number grows with frequent converts, who are channeled into Bible study groups. Those on drugs also are given medical help.

Many of them haven taken up communal-style living, in imitation of early Christians, living in groups in houses scattered about in residential areas with names such as House of Acts, Tree of Life, Fish House.

Some are disciplined communities including married couples; others are more casual, offering a young person a pad and food, along with Bible talk.

The Christian World Liberation Front maintains a two-room office near the campus, decorated with modernistic pictures of Jesus and slogans. It also publishes an underground-style newspaper, "Right On."

Several older Christians have helped shape the movement, including Dr. Jack Sparks, 40, a former Pennsylvania State University professor who came here with his family to do missionary work.

His living room regularly is crowded with young men and women for study and worship. Says he: "We pass an offering plate and tell people to put money in if they can and take it out if they need it. It always ends up empty."

Rev. John A. MacDonald of the Mill Valley First Baptist Church, who also helped spur the Berkeley evangelism, says that when a hippie accepts Christ, he "easily assumes that total wisdom floods his being."

Although he is just "a beginner, a simple babe in Christ, his mystical background tells him, 'This is it— I've arrived'. No matter what a serious-minded pastor or theologian might offer, if the young convert has a different revelation, he thinks everyone else is wrong."

He says the converted hippies have a "hard time reconciling their new outlook to what they find in the churches" and "many church members have a hard time accepting the hippies."

Baptist Church Sets Vacation Bible School

The First Baptist Church of San Rafael will begin its annual vacation Bible school Monday. It will run through June 24.

The school is open to children from 3½ to 12 years old.

The World Of God Delivered By Bottles

By KALEVI J. SAARI

HELSINKI (UPI)—Shortly after the end of World War II some Finnish religious organizations began sending "Bottled religion" to the atheist Soviet Union and its Baltic satellites. Bible messages were dropped into the Gulf of Finland with the idea they would drift to Soviet shores.

Now it appears someone else has gotten into the act. Bottles with the Word of God have been found in the Gulf that are not of Finnish origin.

INVESTIGATING

Tuomas Alhava, chief of the security police which are investigating the latest finds, said the new "bottler" probably was some central European religious organization, "operating possibly from West Germany."

Alhava's investigation began when fishermen and vacationers along Finland's south coast discovered sealed bottles containing excerpts from the Bible, including the Gospel of John, drifting in the coastal waters. The security police were alerted even though Finnish law does not forbid sending such material. Alhava agreed, however, to look into the matter. His investigators came to the conclusion the bottle-borne "mail" was non-Finnish because of the very small and unusual print used in the translations.

Alhava gave as his opinion that a foreign vessel plying traffic in the Gulf of Finland had let the bottles into the sea. The wind apparently shifted and the bottles drifted north to Finland instead of east to the Soviet Union or south to Estonia, Lithuania and Latvia.

MANY BOTTLES

The number of the bottles fished from the water along the coast was high, Alhava said, but he declined to say just how many there were.

The security police said they first learned of efforts to send "bottled religion" to the Soviet Union after World War II.

At first it was done by throwing sealed bottles into rivers flowing across the Finno-Soviet border. Unless the bottles were broken on the way, the result was certain. Later some religious organizations — Alhava does not identify them —dumped the bottles into the Gulf hoping for favorable winds. Sometimes, due to wind shifts, the bottles have ended back on the Finnish coast.

Some tourists even have tried to smuggle religious books and pamphlets into the Soviet Union, most of which are confiscated by gimlet-eyed authorities.

While Finnish officials decline to estimate the extent of such activities, periodic newspaper reports and stories by fishermen indicate the smuggling is, if not booming, still going on.

New Sermon Series Is Now Under Way

Rev. Robert H. Graham, minister of the new Orthodox Presbyterian Church, 495 San Marin Drive in Novato, has begun a new series of Sunday evening sermons on "What Presbyterians Believe." Service time is 6 p.m.

Also Graham is currently devoting his Sunday morning sermons to a discussion of the Beatitudes, with the concluding one June 21.

Baptist Funds Off

VALLEY FORGE, Pa. (UPI) —The American Baptist Convention reports income for its Mission Budget for the first three months of 1970 totaled $3427,476, or 87.6 per cent of the goal, and a drop of $186,659 from income for the corresponding period of 1969.

RABBI MORTON HOFFMAN

A Reformist To Israel

By LARRY MOWELL

Rabbi Morton Hoffman of Congregation Rodef Sholom in Santa Venetia might have moved to Israel sooner if it weren't for his religious beliefs.

It sounds strange that a rabbi would have trouble finding a job in the homeland of the Jews, but Hoffman, a reform rabbi, said there are not many jobs for reform rabbis in Israel during an interview Tuesday on the front stoop of his Terra Linda home.

Hoffman, who said, "We always had the feeling that it would be nice to take a crack at it (living in Israel)," left Wednesday for a job as a counselor to immigrants in Haifa, Israel.

"I think I accomplished everything that I could reasonably hope to accomplish in 13 years here," the rabbi said.

That is an understatement. Hoffman, 43, came to Marin in 1957, only four years after his ordination, to take over a fledgling congregation of about 100 young families that had no facilities of its own, only rented space at the old Jewish Community Center on Mission Street in San Rafael.

He said his primary responsibility was to build and he did. More than $300,000 was raised to build a modern religious sanctuary and classroom complex at 170 North San Pedro Road.

The sanctuary was completed in May 1962, and 13 classrooms were added in November 1965.

The rabbi preferred to spend his time in the classroom section. "I look upon myself primarily as an educator and teacher. I relish the role of teacher the most," he said.

RABBI HOFFMAN
A new career

He leaves a congregation of about 400 families and 500 students in Judaism and Hebrew for his successor, Rabbi David Davis of New York City. Davis will assume his duties Aug. 1, but Hoffman will be busy in his new job by then.

Hoffman will be general director of a new center aimed at settling American and Canadian students who want to live and work in Israel.

"My job is to talk their language and help them with that big adjustment problem," he said. Hoffman said he looks forward to his work even though he will have no rabbinical duties.

The rabbi said the work will not be strange to him because he took many psychology and counseling courses while working for his masters degree and ordination at Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Asked why he wants to move to Israel permanently, he said, "I've always been close to Israeli affairs."

Hoffman has made five visits to Israel. He went there first in 1959 to marry his wife, Aviva, an Israeli he met at the University of California. He spent nine months there in 1965 and 1966 on sabbatical leave and went most recently last July and August on a special fact-finding trip with other prominent rabbis.

Hoffman qualifies as a prominent rabbi because he was president of Board of Rabbis of Northern California from 1967 to last year.

His experience as president, he said, was probably the key factor in his decision to emigrate.

During his terms, the hot feud with the Arab nations surrounding Israel boiled over into the six-day war and he had to maintain maximum support in the Bay Area, he said.

That meant an extensive speaking schedule and close relationships with the Israeli consulate in San Francisco, he said.

It was one of these officials with whom Hoffman developed "a profoundly close man-to-man relationship" who found a job for the rabbi who complained he would not be able to find a suitable job in the Jewish homeland.

Hoffman's reform Judaism is not officially sanctioned in Israel, he said, but he sticks by it. "We (the reformers) simply feel that religion in order to survive has to change with the times," he said.

At the Santa Venetia synagogue he held family services once a month. In Israel, men must worship alone as they have done for centuries, he said.

He also called for changes in prayers which still refer to animal sacrifice. "This is totally irrelevant," he said.

"You find some rabbis that are more worried about whether a certain pan is kosher than they are about a soul going down the drain," he charged.

He said he places lives above dogma, but is not against tradition. "I try to look to see what I can retain that is still meaningful, but where it has to be changed, it has to be changed. That's all," he explained.

Hoffman was an active worker in spheres other than religion. One of the founders of the Marin Human Rights Commission in 1963, he was also active in a movement to save Biafran children, the Bay Area Crusade, the boy scouts and the Clergy Advisory Board of Planned Parenthood Association of Marin County.

His new home is not too close to the fighting, he said, so he probably won't be involved in any fighting, but his record in Marin indicates he will participate in almost everything else.

"I'm sure I'll be gettng involved because it's my way to get involved. I'm socially oriented," he said.

PULPIT GUEST — Dr. Carl Segerhammar, president of the Pacific Southwest Synod of the Lutheran Church in America of which Faith Lutheran Church of San Rafael is a member, will be guest speaker at the 10 a.m. service tomorrow. A fellowship hour will follow where he will conduct a question and answer period.

Baha'i's Set Special Race Unity Day Event

The Baha'i Communities in Marin will observe Race Unity Day tomorrow with a meeting beginning at 1 p.m. at Isabel Cook School in San Anselmo.

Moderating a panel discussion on "Education for Diversity" will be Elizabeth Gibson.

Mrs. Gibson, a member of the Baha'i's since 1963, is active in radio and television writing.

Novato Youth Named To Synod Commission

Curtis Barton, member of Grace Lutheran Church in Novato, has been named to the Youth Committee of the California-Nevada District of the Lutheran Church — Missouri Synod.

Curtis was one of over 50 candidates for seven positions on the youth committee, which plans a significant youth activities for the 220 member congregations of the district.

The committee also interprets and responds to the place of youth in the church, the feelings and attitudes of youth toward the church, and the church's role in community affairs and issues.

Barton, 17, is president of the Senior High youth group at Grace, and its representative on the church council. A senior at San Marin High School next fall, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Barton of 6 Denise Court in Novato.

Theme For Bible School Announced

"Go Tell Your World," is the theme of the Central Assembly of God Vacation Bible School which opens on Monday. It will continue through June 24.

Classes, 9 a.m. to noon, will be held at the church which is located at 517 D Street in San Rafael.

Nuns Seek $6,000 For Ruining Tree

MT. ANGEL, Ore. (UPI)—An order of nuns has sued two college students for $6,000 for trimming branches from the top of a 90-year-old sequoia tree.

The Benedictine Sisters of Mt. Angel brought the suit because, they said, the trimming ruined the symetry of the tree, one of the tallest sequoias in Oregon.

Firestone To Union Board

BERKELEY (AP) —Leonard K. Firestone of Los Angeles, president of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. of California has been named a trustee of Berkeley Graduate Theological Union.

The Union, which has 1,000 students studying Protestant, Catholic and Jewish theologies, is adjacent to the University of California at Berkeley but not a part of U.C.

In announcing appointment of Firestone, a spokesman for the Union said an effort was being made to broaden the governing board membership and encourage ecumenical efforts.

Ministry For Deaf

WINNIPEG (UPI)—A new cooperative ministry for the deaf will be initiated at schools for the deaf in Milton and Bellevue, Ont., this summer, says the Lutheran Church of Canada. The project is a joint effort of the Luthern Church of Canada and the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod.

A CALLING—With a Bible under his arm, Galen Craig, one of the people known around the University of California campus at Berkeley as "Jesus Freaks," attempts to interest passersby. He also is carrying a supply of religious literature which he distributes to people on the street. Girl at right holding a cross is unidentified. (AP Wirephoto)

CALLING IN BERKELEY

They Gladly Accept The Name Of 'Jesus Freaks'

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — As they put it, they've been "turned on by Jesus." And things seem different. Most of them are hippies. Others are "straight" kids. In either case, they're making their presence felt around the University of California campus here.

They're called "Jesus Freaks," a term originally applied in derision, but which they gladly accept. After all, the term, "Christian" itself originally was used in pagan mockery of the early believers in Christ.

"Jesus is back!" said a tall, barefoot, long-haired lad, handing out evangelical tracts to passing students. "Take a trip with the Lord—it's the greatest."

Here and there about the campus, on class days and weekends, it's easy to spot these special kind of radicals in clusters of youths, "rapping" about Jesus in arguments with assorted New Left advocates.

Wherever the "Jesus Freaks" hold forth, there's usually a sizable crowd. "One way! One way!" they signal about Christ, with a single finger held aloft, instead of the "V"-peace-victory sign.

Regularly, they also make forays into downtown San Francisco, displaying their signs, "Jesus Saves," and speaking on sidewalks outside the "skin" bars featuring nude dancers.

"I've been through 'grass', the heavyweight stuff, LSD and speed, and all the meditation-breathing bit, and it just freaked me out and down," said one of them, a thin, bearded young man. "But Jesus is very true, very hip, very with it. He's our thing."

Others tell similar stories of having been through drugs and Oriental mysticism before finding greater satisfaction in "following Jesus."

Formally, the "Jesus Freaks" are known as the Christian World Liberation Front. They began appearing around Berkeley about a year ago, adding a new element to a campus of 28,000 students known for its tumults and radical movements—Marxists, Maoists, Free-Speech'ers,, was resisters.

The "Jesus Freaks" also are anti-Vietnam War and generally antiestablishment, even antichurch so far as the official institutiones, claiming it has become stuffy, stiff and lost its sense of the "Spirit," the mysteries and joy.

"The straight church is too uptight," said one young man in black pullover shirt, beads and striped pants. "But Jesus is a real revolutionary, a man of the people."

There are no regularly kept statistics on the "Jesus Freaks," but estimates are that 300 to 400 of them are active here, and the number grows with frequent converts, who are channeled into Bible study groups. Those on drugs also are given medical help.

Many of them haven taken up communal-style living, in imitation of early Christians, living in groups in houses scattered about in residential areas with names such as House of Acts, Tree of Life, Fish House.

Some are disciplined communies including married couples; others are more casual, offering a young person a pad and food, along with Bible talk.

The Christian World Liberation Front maintains a two-room office near the campus, decorated with modernistic pictures of Jesus and slogans. It also publishes an underground-style newspaper, "Right On."

Several older Christians have helped shape the movement, including Dr. Jack Sparks, 40, a former Pennsylvania State University professor who came here with his family to do missionary work.

His living room regularly is crowded with young men and women for study and worship. Says he: "We pass an offering plate and tell people to put money in if they can and take it out if they need it. It always ends up empty."

Rev. John A. MacDonald of the Mill Valley First Baptist Church, who also helped spur the Berkeley evangelism, says that when a hippie accepts Christ, he "easily assumes that total wisdom floods his being."

Although he is just "a beginner, a simple babe in Christ, his mystical background tells him, 'This is it— I've arrived'. No matter what a serious-minded pastor or theologian might offer, if the young convert has a different revelation, he thinks everyone else is wrong."

He says the converted hippies have a "hard time reconciling their new outlook to what they find in the churches" and "many church members have a hard time accepting the hippies."

Baptist Church Sets Vacation Bible School

The First Baptist Church of San Rafael will begin its annual vacation Bible school Monday. It will run through June 24.

The school is open to children from 3½ to 12 years old.

The World Of God Delivered By Bottles

By KALEVI J. SAARI

HELSINKI (UPI)—Shortly after the end of World War II some Finnish religious organizations began sending "Bottled religion" to the atheist Soviet Union and its Baltic satellites. Bible messages were dropped into the Gulf of Finland with the idea they would drift to Soviet shores.

Now it appears someone else has gotten into the act. Bottles with the Word of God have been found in the Gulf that are not of Finnish origin.

INVESTIGATING

Tuomas Alhava, chief of the security police which are investigating the latest finds, said the new "bottler" probably was some central European religious organization, "operating possibly from West Germany."

Alhava's investigation began when fishermen and vacationers along Finland's south coast discovered sealed bottles containing excerpts from the Bible, including the Gospel of John, drifting in the coastal waters. The security police were alerted even though Finnish law does not forbid sending such material. Alhava agreed, however, to look into the matter. His investigators came to the conclusion the bottle-borne "mail" was non-Finnish because of the very small and unusual print used in the translations.

Alhava gave as his opinion that a foreign vessel plying traffic in the Gulf of Finland had let the bottles into the sea. The wind apparently shifted and the bottles drifted north to Finland instead of east to the Soviet Union or south to Estonia, Lithuania and Latvia.

MANY BOTTLES

The number of the bottles fished from the water along the coast was high, Alhava said, but he declined to say just how many there were.

The security police said they first learned of efforts to send "bottled religion" to the Soviet Union after World War II.

At first it was done by throwing sealed bottles into rivers flowing across the Finno-Soviet border. Unless the bottles were broken on the way, the result was certain. Later some religious organizations — Alhava does not identify them —dumped the bottles into the Gulf hoping for favorable winds. Sometimes, due to wind shifts, the bottles have ended back on the Finnish coast.

Some tourists even have tried to smuggle religious books and pamphlets into the Soviet Union, most of which are confiscated by gimlet-eyed authorities.

While Finnish officials decline to estimate the extent of such activities, periodic newspaper reports and stories by fishermen indicate the smuggling is, if not booming, still going on.

New Sermon Series Is Now Under Way

Rev. Robert H. Graham, minister of the new Orthodox Presbyterian Church, 495 San Marin Drive in Novato, has begun a new series of Sunday evening sermons on "What Presbyterians Believe." Service time is 6 p.m.

Also Graham is currently devoting his Sunday morning sermons to a discussion of the Beatitudes, with the concluding one June 21.

Baptist Funds Off

VALLEY FORGE, Pa. (UPI) —The American Baptist Convention reports income for its Mission Budget for the first three months of 1970 totaled $3427,476, or 87.6 per cent of the goal, and a drop of $186,659 from income for the corresponding period of 1969.

RABBI MORTON HOFFMAN

A Reformist To Israel

By LARRY MOWELL

Rabbi Morton Hoffman of Congregation Rodef Sholom in Santa Venetia might have moved to Israel sooner if it weren't for his religious beliefs.

It sounds strange that a rabbi would have trouble finding a job in the homeland of the Jews, but Hoffman, a reform rabbi, said there are not many jobs for reform rabbis in Israel during an interview Tuesday on the front stoop of his Terra Linda home.

Hoffman, who said, "We always had the feeling that it would be nice to take a crack at it (living in Israel)," left Wednesday for a job as a counselor to immigrants in Haifa, Israel.

"I think I accomplished everything that I could reasonably hope to accomplish in 13 years here," the rabbi said.

That is an understatement. Hoffman, 43, came to Marin in 1957, only four years after his ordination, to take over a fledgling congregation of about 100 young families that had no facilities of its own, only rented space at the old Jewish Community Center on Mission Street in San Rafael.

He said his primary responsibility was to build and he did. More than $300,000 was raised to build a modern religious sanctuary and classroom complex at 170 North San Pedro Road.

The sanctuary was completed in May 1962, and 13 classrooms were added in November 1965.

The rabbi preferred to spend his time in the classroom section. "I look upon myself primarily as an educator and teacher. I relish the role of teacher the most," he said.

RABBI HOFFMAN
A new career

He leaves a congregation of about 400 families and 500 students in Judaism and Hebrew for his successor, Rabbi David Davis of New York City. Davis will assume his duties Aug. 1, but Hoffman will be busy in his new job by then.

Hoffman will be general director of a new center aimed at settling American and Canadian students who want to live and work in Israel.

"My job is to talk their language and help them with that big adjustment problem," he said. Hoffman said he looks forward to his work even though he will have no rabbinical duties.

The rabbi said the work will not be strange to him because he took many psychology and counseling courses while working for his masters degree and ordination at Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Asked why he wants to move to Israel permanently, he said, "I've always been close to Israeli affairs."

Hoffman has made five visits to Israel. He went there first in 1959 to marry his wife, Aviva, an Israeli he met at the University of California. He spent nine months there in 1965 and 1966 on sabbatical leave and went most recently last July and August on a special fact-finding trip with other prominent rabbis.

Hoffman qualifies as a prominent rabbi because he was president of Board of Rabbis of Northern California from 1967 to last year.

His experience as president, he said, was probably the key factor in his decision to emigrate.

During his terms, the hot feud with the Arab nations surrounding Israel boiled over into the six-day war and he had to maintain maximum support in the Bay Area, he said.

That meant an extensive speaking schedule and close relationships with the Israeli consulate in San Francisco, he said.

It was one of these officials with whom Hoffman developed "a profoundly close man-to-man relationship" who found a job for the rabbi who complained he would not be able to find a suitable job in the Jewish homeland.

Hoffman's reform Judaism is not officially sanctioned in Israel, he said, but he sticks by it. "We (the reformers) simply feel that religion in order to survive has to change with the times," he said.

At the Santa Venetia synagogue he held family services once a month. In Israel, men must worship alone as they have done for centuries, he said.

He also called for changes in prayers which still refer to animal sacrifice. "This is totally irrelevant," he said.

"You find some rabbis that are more worried about whether a certain pan is kosher than they are about a soul going down the drain," he charged.

He said he places lives above dogma, but is not against tradition. "I try to look to see what I can retain that is still meaningful, but where it has to be changed, it has to be changed. That's all," he explained.

Hoffman was an active worker in spheres other than religion. One of the founders of the Marin Human Rights Commission in 1963, he was also active in a movement to save Biafran children, the Bay Area Crusade, the boy scouts and the Clergy Advisory Board of Planned Parenthood Association of Marin County.

His new home is not too close to the fighting, he said, so he probably won't be involved in any fighting, but his record in Marin indicates he will participate in almost everything else.

"I'm sure I'll be gettng involved because it's my way to get involved. I'm socially oriented," he said.

PULPIT GUEST — Dr. Carl Segerhammar, president of the Pacific Southwest Synod of the Lutheran Church in America of which Faith Lutheran Church of San Rafael is a member, will be guest speaker at the 10 a.m. service tomorrow. A fellowship hour will follow where he will conduct a question and answer period.

Baha'i's Set Special Race Unity Day Event

The Baha'i Communities in Marin will observe Race Unity Day tomorrow with a meeting beginning at 1 p.m. at Isabel Cook School in San Anselmo.

Moderating a panel discussion on "Education for Diversity" will be Elizabeth Gibson.

Mrs. Gibson, a member of the Baha'i's since 1963, is active in radio and television writing.

Novato Youth Named To Synod Commission

Curtis Barton, member of Grace Lutheran Church in Novato, has been named to the Youth Committee of the California-Nevada District of the Lutheran Church — Missouri Synod.

Curtis was one of over 50 candidates for seven positions on the youth committee, which plans a significant youth activities for the 220 member congregations of the district.

The committee also interprets and responds to the place of youth in the church, the feelings and attitudes of youth toward the church, and the church's role in community affairs and issues.

Barton, 17, is president of the Senior High youth group at Grace, and its representative on the church council. A senior at San Marin High School next fall, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Barton of 6 Denise Court in Novato.

Theme For Bible School Announced

"Go Tell Your World," is the theme of the Central Assembly of God Vacation Bible School which opens on Monday. It will continue through June 24.

Classes, 9 a.m. to noon, will be held at the church which is located at 517 D Street in San Rafael.

Nuns Seek $6,000 For Ruining Tree

MT. ANGEL, Ore. (UPI)—An order of nuns has sued two college students for $6,000 for trimming branches from the top of a 90-year-old sequoia tree.

The Benedictine Sisters of Mt. Angel brought the suit because, they said, the trimming ruined the symetry of the tree, one of the tallest sequoias in Oregon.

Firestone To Union Board

BERKELEY (AP) —Leonard K. Firestone of Los Angeles, president of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. of California has been named a trustee of Berkeley Graduate Theological Union.

The Union, which has 1,000 students studying Protestant, Catholic and Jewish theologies, is adjacent to the University of California at Berkeley but not a part of U.C.

In announcing appointment of Firestone, a spokesman for the Union said an effort was being made to broaden the governing board membership and encourage ecumenical efforts.

Ministry For Deaf

WINNIPEG (UPI)—A new cooperative ministry for the deaf will be initiated at schools for the deaf in Milton and Bellevue, Ont., this summer, says the Lutheran Church of Canada. The project is a joint effort of the Luthern Church of Canada and the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod.

Goofy's Funny View Of Life From The Portside

By JIM MURRAY

On the first tee, the Cal baseball coach George Wolfman surveyed his hands dubiously before picking up a club. "I dunno," he complained. "Look at all them blisters."

Off to one side, the tall, spare figure with the gray around the temples asked dryly: "Shall I call an ambulance?"

The coach had just been brushed back by one of the most genuine species of that uniquely American sporting type — the left-hander.

You know the Disney character Goofy the Dog? Well, THAT'S Vernon Louis Gomez. Lefty got the funny view of the world you only get from the portside. He looks as gloomy as a Sunday in Budapest but he puts the world on like it was a .220 hitter with a bad habit.

Lefty used to say he was the getaway driver for the baseball dynasty known as Murderers' Row. Ruth, Gehrig, Ruppert, McCarthy, Lazzeri, DiMaggio, Dickey are hazy legends to us but they are just guys who hogged the shower or messed up the double-play to Vernon (Lefty) Gomez.

They called him "Goofy" for the same reason they call the village idiot "Einstein." To be sure, there was the time when the real Einstein sat across the railroad car from him and the newspaperman asked Lefty if he knew who Einstein was. "He invented electricity. His hair hasn't come down yet," Lefty said, adding, "I got an invention, too."

The newsman was intrigued. "Yeah," said Lefty. "It's a revolving fish bowl. It's for tropical fish who are lazy."

Lefty consolidated his reputation by pausing in the middle of an afternoon once to look up and watch an airplane go overhead. What made this notable was that it was also the middle of the World Series, the bases were loaded and the tying run was at the plate. Moreover, Gomez was on the pitcher's mound.

Lefty was one of the game's greatest pitchers. He holds the World Series record for most victories without a defeat, 6-0. He won 189 major league games, four times a 20-game winner but his droll recollections would seem to suggest his nickname should have been "Gopher" Gomez.

"I made a star outta Joe DiMaggio," he likes to boast. "They didn't know he could go back on a ball till I took up pitching. I never saw the front of his uniform for four seasons."

The first time he faced the A's slugger, Jimmie Foxx, catcher Bill Dickey came out to ask "Do you know what to do with this guy?" Gomez answered, dead-pan: "Yeah, a fast ball, then run like hell over to back up third base." Another time, Foxx came to bat and Gomez shook off all Dickey's signals. Dickey approached. "All right, what do you want to throw him?" "Let's wait a minute, maybe he'll get a long distance call."

He was so skinny he claimed it staggered him to put his cap on and he often complained he could stand underneath the shower and not get wet. "I didn't cast a shadow till I was 25 years old. I had to put the bat down three times and rest on the way to the plate from the dugout." He scored one whole run in 1936 but he ran wild in 1933, scoring three. "It's a good thing. If it wasn't for me, they never would have got those Yankees out."

Far from giving him an inferiority complex, Lefty was on first base one day when Babe Ruth came to bat and Lefty called time and walked down to Ruth. "You gonna bunt me over?" he asked. He claimed that Al Simmons hit a ball so far off him one day that, by the time it came down, the league president was different from the one with his name on the ball. Someone asked him if he ever pitched batting practice and Vernon answered "Yeah. But not on purpose."

The press was kind to Lefty because he was kind to them.

Teen Fairfax Girl Sets Sights On Olympic Swim

By RALPH CHATOIAN

Broad-shouldered, slim and well-tanned, Robin Bachrach of Fairfax looks every bit a speedy swimmer. And she is.

She's 15 now and stands 5-foot-9. It's hard to realize she's the same little Pixie-like girl who at 12, broke a national Amateur Athletic Union record at the Marin County Swimming Championships. But then that wide, bright smile says yes, it's the same gal.

She's still winning events in age group swimming, but her mind is on bigger things these days. Say as big as the 1972 Olympics.

She got as far as the qualfying meet for the Olympics in 1968 when she was 13, in the 100-meter butterfly. Her time of 1:09 wasn't good enough to make the Olympic field, but next time she tries for the big show she'll be 17, wiser and stronger.

"I'll probably have to be down to about 1:05 to make the Olympics," she said. That's cutting off a lot of time. "Yes, it's quite a lot," she said with a far away look in her eyes, perhaps thinking of Munich, Germany, site of the '72 Olympics.

ROBIN BACHRACH
Ambitious swimmer

When she was 14, she won a gold medal in the 100-meter fly in her age group at the National Junior Olympics in Knoxville, Tenn.

She is at the stage in swimming where she can use age group swimming as practice, saving the really all-out efforts for senior events, competing against the best in our country, as well as some of the top international stars.

HAWAII MEET

Next big one for Robin, a junior at Drake High School, will be the Keo Nakama Invitational in Honolulu, June 25-27. After staying in Hawaii long enough to compete in an age group meet July 1 through 4, she plans to get back to the Bay Area in time for the Santa Clara International Invitational, July 10-12, which will draw some of the top stars of the swim racing world.

She feels she is just starting to get into form for the swim season, since being slowed most of the winter by colds and the flu.

'MUDCAT' SCORES AGAIN

Card Castoff Saves A's

BALTIMORE (UPI) —Jim "Mudcat" Grant has a right to be puzzled about the straight cash deal which axed him from the St. Louis Cardinals roster before the start of the 1970 season.

The Oakland A's, however, aren't asking any questions. They benefitted from another helping of Grant's sterling relief work Friday night in an 11-inning, 4-2 win over Baltimore.

Grant has allowed only four earned runs this year for a dazzling earned run mark of 0.82, with two wins, no losses and eight saves.

MAINLY STARTER

The 34-year-old righthander has been in the major leagues since 1958, mainly as a starting pitcher. He spent six years with Cleveland and four with Minnesota before going to the National League Los Angeles Dodgers in 1968. He split last season between Montreal and St. Louis.

Grant fired four innings of scoreless ball Friday night and helped win his own game with a sacrifice bunt.

Dick Green started the 11th by being hit by a pitch from the Orioles' Eddie Watt. Green was sacrificed to second by Grant and came home on Campy Campaneris' double to break a prolonged 2-2 tie. Reggie Jackson then doubled home the final run of the contest.

A'S HOMERS

Campaneris slugged the first pitch of the game out of the ballpark for his fifth homer. Rick Monday followed moments later with another bases empty blast, also his fifth, against Baltimore starter Tom Phoebus.

Oakland's Rollie Fingers held the Orioles in check until Clay Dalrymple and Don Buford tied the game with homers in the sixth. Grant came on in the eighth, though Fingers allowed only three hits in seven innings.

The victory was Oakland's seventh in nine games and kept the club within six games of first place Minnesota in the American League West.

Giant Rookie Loses Debut, Wins Admirers

St. Louis Defeats Pitlock

By JOE SARGIS

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Maybe, Bob Gibson thought, he should stop warming up before a game.

Friday night against the San Francisco Giants he had trouble warming up before the game in the St. Louis Bullpen because of a stiff breeze,

So, he quit and went to the bench.

A little more than two hours later he was in the clubhouse with a five-hit, 4-1 victory over the Giants.

Gibson went the distance for the fourth time in his last five starts, struck out eight batters and walked only two as he improved his record to 7-3.

HELPS SELF

Big Bob helped himself with a booming homer to center, his first of the year and 16th in the big leagues.

Rookie southpaw Lee Pitlock, who only three years ago watched Gibson pitch from the stands, was the famed St. Louis righthander's starting opponent Friday night.

Pitlock, who posted a 10-3 record at Phoenix before being called up earlier in the week, showed a lot of promise in the five innings he worked. Only Gibson's homer and a long sacrifice fly to dead center by Carl Taylor were well hit off the youngster, who was the victim of the wind and slow fielding.

WINDY DOUBLES

Wind blown doubles by Lou Brock and Jose Cardenal, a wild pitch and Taylor's sac fly helped the Cards to two runs off Pitlock in the first and Gibson hit his homer in the second for a 3-0 lead.

The Cards scored their fourth run in the third the hard way. Pitlock walked Cardenal and then balked him to second. An infield out moved Cardenal to third but a moment later he was trapped off third on a smash to second by Joe Torre. The Giants finally tagged Cardenal out with Torre racing to second from whence he scored on a single by Julian Javier.

Giants manager Charlie Fox and pitching Coach Larry Jansen were pleased with what Pitlock showed them. Both expected a live fast ball but Pitlock also revealed a fine curve, which he threw eight times for strikes.

LOT OF POISE

"He looks like a good one to me," said Jansen. "He showed a lot of poise for a youngster, which is something we all look for."

The Giants scored their lone run off Gibson in the seventh. Tito Fuentes opened the inning with a single, his second hit, and Hal Lanier walked. Then Gibson, while standing on the rubber, had the ball fall out of his hand for a balk, which moved Fuentes to third. He scored as pinchhitter John Stephenson grounded out to deep short.

PRESSURE MAN — Arnold Palmer, shown en route to a round of 69, will be pressuring Western Open leader Hugh Royer in final two rounds.

(UPI Telephoto)

Pressure-Cooker Buildup For Western Open Leader

By ED SAINSBURY

CHICAGO (UPI) —Hugh Royer could find out today about pressure on a golf course.

The 33-year-old Columbus, Ga., pro missed Beverly Country Club's record by one stroke Friday with a 65, six under par, and grabbed the lead at the midway point of the Western Open with a 36-hole total of 132, 10 under par.

His four-stroke margin over his closest challengers equalled the largest at the midway point on the pro tour this year, previously attained by Grier Jones at the Monsanto Open, but Jones couldn't hold on to win that one. Today could answer the question whether Royer can hold on to win the Western's first prize money of $26,000.

Tourney-tested Bobby Nichols, a former PGA champion, and Arnold Palmer, victor in 55 pro tournies, were closest to Royer. Each had rounds of 67 and 69 for their 136 total.

SOME PROBLEMS

Today Royer will play the 6,923-yard Beverly links with Palmer and he'll have all the problems posed by Arnie's Army when they bust through the ropes, block the line of sight to the green and generally make conditions tougher for Palmer's playing partner.

The showdown, if Royer can stand up to the pressure, should be one of the features of the network televising of the event. Nichols will be playing with Johnny Pott, one of the five players tied at 137, five strokes behind, in the next to the last twosome.

The other late pairings, all involving 137 shooters, will be Tom Weiskopf and Tom Shaw, and Don Bies and Dow Finsterwald.

TIES RECORD

Royer played his best competitive round ever in posting his 65 and he tied the course record for the back nine with a five under par 30. He could have been better, but on the fourth hole he hit three times into trees and had to settle for a double bogey six.

Palmer could have been closer too, but when a rain storm threatened while he was eight under par, he three putted to bogey the 15th hole. Then, after an hour and nine minute delay because of the storm, he three putted the 17th to fall back into the deadlock with Nichols. Thus, he bogeyed two of the last four holes.

The field found the course easier Friday and 39 players broke the par of 71 while 20 more equalled it. But only 10 players were under par on both rounds.

The field was cut to 81 players, the low 70 scorers and ties, for both the third and fourth rounds with those who shot 146 or higher eliminated.

Luby Rolls Top Bowling Score

Chuck Luby rolled a 685 three-game series to lead the bowlers for the week at Country Club Bowl in San Rafael, while Sylvia Knutson's 824 four-gamer and Bea Hoffmann's 617 three-game set ied the women.

Top junior score of the week in Marin County came from Wayne Ziegler, a 678 three-game series at Greenbrae Lanes.

Goofy's Funny View Of Life From The Portside

By JIM MURRAY

On the first tee, the Cal baseball coach George Wolfman surveyed his hands dubiously before picking up a club. "I dunno," he complained. "Look at all them blisters."

Off to one side, the tall, spare figure with the gray around the temples asked dryly: "Shall I call an ambulance?"

The coach had just been brushed back by one of the most genuine species of that uniquely American sporting type — the left-hander.

You know the Disney character Goofy the Dog? Well, THAT'S Vernon Louis Gomez. Lefty got the funny view of the world you only get from the portside. He looks as gloomy as a Sunday in Budapest but he puts the world on like it was a .220 hitter with a bad habit.

Lefty used to say he was the getaway driver for the baseball dynasty known as Murderers' Row. Ruth, Gehrig, Ruppert, McCarthy, Lazzeri, DiMaggio, Dickey are hazy legends to us but they are just guys who hogged the shower or messed up the double-play to Vernon (Lefty) Gomez.

They called him "Goofy" for the same reason they call the village idiot "Einstein." To be sure, there was the time when the real Einstein sat across the railroad car from him and the newspaperman asked Lefty if he knew who Einstein was. "He invented electricity. His hair hasn't come down yet," Lefty said, adding, "I got an invention, too."

The newsman was intrigued. "Yeah," said Lefty. "It's a revolving fish bowl. It's for tropical fish who are lazy."

Lefty consolidated his reputation by pausing in the middle of an afternoon once to look up and watch an airplane go overhead. What made this notable was that it was also the middle of the World Series, the bases were loaded and the tying run was at the plate. Moreover, Gomez was on the pitcher's mound.

Sports

Lefty was one of the game's greatest pitchers. He holds the World Series record for most victories without a defeat, 6-0. He won 189 major league games, four times a 20-game winner but his droll recollections would seem to suggest his nickname should have been "Gopher" Gomez.

"I made a star outta Joe DiMaggio," he likes to boast. "They didn't know he could go back on a ball till I took up pitching. I never saw the front of his uniform for four seasons."

The first time he faced the A's slugger, Jimmie Foxx, catcher Bill Dickey came out to ask "Do you know what to do with this guy?" Gomez answered, dead-pan: "Yeah, a fast ball, then run like hell over to back up third base." Another time, Foxx came to bat and Gomez shook off all Dickey's signals. Dickey approached. "All right, what do you want to throw him?" "Let's wait a minute, maybe he'll get a long distance call."

He was so skinny he claimed it staggered him to put his cap on and he often complained he could stand underneath the shower and not get wet. "I didn't cast a shadow till I was 25 years old. I had to put the bat down three times and rest on the way to the plate from the dugout." He scored one whole run in 1936 but he ran wild in 1933, scoring three. "It's a good thing. If it wasn't for me, they never would have got those Yankees out."

Far from giving him an inferiority complex, Lefty was on first base one day when Babe Ruth came to bat and Lefty called time and walked down to Ruth. "You gonna bunt me over?" he asked. He claimed that Al Simmons hit a ball so far off him one day that, by the time it came down, the league president was different from the one with his name on the ball. Someone asked him if he ever pitched batting practice and Vernon answered "Yeah. But not on purpose."

The press was kind to Lefty because he was kind to them.

Giant Rookie Loses Debut, Wins Admirers

St. Louis Defeats Pitlock

By JOE SARGIS

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Maybe, Bob Gibson thought, he should stop warming up before a game.

Friday night against the San Francisco Giants he had trouble warming up before the game in the St. Louis Bullpen because of a stiff breeze,

So, he quit and went to the bench.

A little more than two hours later he was in the clubhouse with a five-hit, 4-1 victory over the Giants.

Gibson went the distance for the fourth time in his last five starts, struck out eight batters and walked only two as he improved his record to 7-3.

HELPS SELF

Big Bob helped himself with a booming homer to center, his first of the year and 16th in the big leagues.

Rookie southpaw Lee Pitlock, who only three years ago watched Gibson pitch from the stands, was the famed St. Louis righthander's starting opponent Friday night.

Pitlock, who posted a 10-3 record at Phoenix before being called up earlier in the week, showed a lot of promise in the five innings he worked. Only Gibson's homer and a long sacrifice fly to dead center by Carl Taylor were well hit off the youngster, who was the victim of the wind and slow fielding.

WINDY DOUBLES

Wind blown doubles by Lou Brock and Jose Cardenal, a wild pitch and Taylor's sac fly helped the Cards to two runs off Pitlock in the first and Gibson hit his homer in the second for a 3-0 lead.

The Cards scored their fourth run in the third the hard way. Pitlock walked Cardenal and then balked him to second. An infield out moved Cardenal to third but a moment later he was trapped off third on a smash to second by Joe Torre. The Giants finally tagged Cardenal out with Torre racing to second from whence he scored on a single by Julian Javier.

Giants manager Charlie Fox and pitching Coach Larry Jansen were pleased with what Pitlock showed them. Both expected a live fast ball but Pitlock also revealed a fine curve, which he threw eight times for strikes.

LOT OF POISE

"He looks like a good one to me," said Jansen. "He showed a lot of poise for a youngster, which is something we all look for."

The Giants scored their lone run off Gibson in the seventh. Tito Fuentes opened the inning with a single, his second hit, and Hal Lanier walked. Then Gibson, while standing on the rubber, had the ball fall out of his hand for a balk, which moved Fuentes to third. He scored as pinchhitter John Stephenson grounded out to deep short.

PRESSURE MAN — Arnold Palmer, shown en route to a round of 69, will be pressuring Western Open leader Hugh Royer in final two rounds.

Pressure-Cooker Buildup For Western Open Leader

By ED SAINSBURY

CHICAGO (UPI) —Hugh Royer could find out today about pressure on a golf course.

The 33-year-old Columbus, Ga., pro missed Beverly Country Club's record by one stroke Friday with a 65, six under par, and grabbed the lead at the midway point of the Western Open with a 36-hole total of 132, 10 under par.

His four-stroke margin over his closest challengers equalled the largest at the midway point on the pro tour this year, previously attained by Grier Jones at the Monsanto Open, but Jones couldn't hold on to win that one. Today could answer the question whether Royer can hold on to win the Western's first prize money of $26,000.

Tourney-tested Bobby Nichols, a former PGA champion, and Arnold Palmer, victor in 55 pro tournies, were closest to Royer. Each had rounds of 67 and 69 for their 136 total.

SOME PROBLEMS

Today Royer will play the 6,923-yard Beverly links with Palmer and he'll have all the problems posed by Arnie's Army when they bust through the ropes, block the line of sight to the green and generally make conditions tougher for Palmer's playing partner.

The showdown, if Royer can stand up to the pressure, should be one of the features of the network televising of the event. Nichols will be playing with Johnny Pott, one of the five players tied at 137, five strokes behind, in the next to the last twosome.

The other late pairings, all involving 137 shooters, will be Tom Weiskopf and Tom Shaw, and Don Bies and Dow Finsterwald.

TIES RECORD

Royer played his best competitive round ever in posting his 65 and he tied the course record for the back nine with a five under par 30. He could have been better, but on the fourth hole he hit three times into trees and had to settle for a double bogey six.

Palmer could have been closer too, but when a rain storm threatened while he was eight under par, he three putted to bogey the 15th hole. Then, after an hour and nine minute delay because of the storm, he three putted the 17th to fall back into the deadlock with Nichols. Thus, he bogeyed two of the last four holes.

The field found the course easier Friday and 39 players broke the par of 71 while 20 more equalled it. But only 10 players were under par on both rounds.

The field was cut to 81 players, the low 70 scorers and ties, for both the third and fourth rounds with those who shot 146 or higher eliminated.

Luby Rolls Top Bowling Score

Chuck Luby rolled a 685 three-game series to lead the bowlers for the week at Country Club Bowl in San Rafael, while Sylvia Knutson's 824 four-gamer and Bea Hoffmann's 617 three-game set led the women.

Top junior score of the week in Marin County came from Wayne Ziegler, a 678 three-game series at Greenbrae Lanes.

Brazilian Ref Cleared Of World Soccer Charge

MEXICO CITY (UPI)—The International Football Federation (FIFA) Friday ruled that Mexico, despite appeals, must play its World Soccer Cup quarterfinal Sunday at a tiny provencial steadium instead of massive Aztec Stadium.

The Federation also cleared Brazilian referee Airton Vieira De Moraes of bribery allegations.

Mexico lost the draw for the right to remain in Mexico City with Russia getting the privilege. Both teams had tied on points and goals for leadership of group I. The winning team has the right to remain at the original site of group play while the runnerup has to travel.

News that Mexico had lost out and had to travel to Toluca, 65 miles northwest of Mexico City, to play Italy before 29,360 fans caused dismay in local soccer circles.

TRAFFIC PROBLEMS

Officials hastened to point out to the FIFA that "massive traffic and other problems" would be caused by the Mexican trip. Italy agreed to Mexico's appeal for a switch, provided the game was played Monday instead of Sunday. Italy and Mexico both asked for the semifinal to be put back one day from June 17.

But the FIFA spokesman said the executive committee refused to make the change because "Toluca has been chosen as a quarterfinal site long ago." The spokesman said measures would be taken to ease the traffic jams in the area of Toluca's Sosal Arena.

The executive committee also closed the case of allegations of bribery against De Moraes. FIFA, in an official statement, said their investigations showed that De Moraes "at no time made financial demands on Uruguayan or Swedish football association officials" as alleged in "malicious rumors."

A CONVERSATION

In fact, said FIFA, the investigation revealed the rumors "originated from a conversation between Swedish journalists and a journalist from Brazil who could not subsequently be identified."

De Moraes was plucked from officiating at the Sweden-Uruguay game June 10 by FIFA President, Sir Stanley Rous, a few hours before kickoff. He denied the allegations and FIFA said Sir Stanley showed "the fullest confidence in his integrity by appointing him to officiate at other matches . . . the matter should now be considered closed."

The eight quarterfinalists worked on their strategy Friday in preparation for Sunday's matches.

Russia plays Uruguay in Mexico City, Italy plays Mexico at Toluca, Brazil meets Puer at Guadalajara and England takes on West Germany at Leon.

Pirate's No-Hitter Gets Big Assist By Mazeroski

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Dock Ellis is big and wild and fast.

Yet in only his third season of major league baseball he's knocking at the Hall of Fame.

Ellis, 25, a Los Angeles native, pitched the first no-hit game of the season Friday night when he turned back the San Diego Padres 2-0.

His no-hitter was preserved in the seventh inning when second baseman Bill Mazeroski made a diving catch of Ramon Webster's liner. The run-scoring department was taken care of nicely by Willie Stargell who hit two homers.

Ellis was his usual wild self. He walked eight men and hit one. He struck out six. It was not exactly a classic no-hitter. He retired the side in order only in the second, seventh and ninth innings. The Padres had runners on first and second via walks in the first, fifth and sixth innings.

The no-hitter was the first game of a twinight doubleheader. In the second game, the Padres grabbed a 5-2 victory. Southpaw Danny Coombs pitched only the second complete game of his eight-year career, Al Ferrara hit a homer and a single and Nate Colbert got a pair of triples.

When Webster hit his hazardous liner in the seventh of the first game Pirate catcher Jerry May said, "I thought it was a hit."

Mazeroski dove to his right, landed on his belly and caught the ball before it hit the dirt.

EASIEST GAME

"That was one heck of a play," said May. The catcher said, "It was the easiest game I've ever caught. I didn't feel any pressure until the ninth."

Ellis, a 6 foot 3 inch 200-pounder felt pressure all right.

"I didn't think I had good enough stuff to throw a no-hitter," he said afterwards. "I thought about the no-hitter from the fourth inning. I know guys who don't want to talk about it but if you're going to throw it, you're going to throw it. I was nervous in the ninth but I was trying to relax."

Walking so many batters didn't bother him, he said. "The ball I was throwing was moving and I was keeping the ball away from the hitters," he said.

The Padres stole three bases but that didn't matter either.

"My main problem ever since I've been pitching is holding men on, he said.

Tackle Ron Mix Still Undecided

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Offensive tackle Ron Mix said recently he still is undecided on whether he will end his retirement and play for the Oakland Raiders.

Mix, 31, an all-leaguer most of his 10 seasons with the San Diego Chargers, was traded last week to the Raiders for two future draft choices. The deal depends upon his decision to play.

Mix told a meeting of sportswriters and sportscasters that he has talked with Al Davis, Oakland managing owner, in "general terms" — mainly about his physical condition. He missed most of the 1969 season with a pulled hamstring muscle before announcing his retirement last December.

Star playmaker of Michigan State's 1969-70 basketball team was 5-foot-5 guard Gary Ganakas, son of the head Sartan coach, Gus Ganakas.

LEFTY

Once, when he was at bat and the team was trailing, the manager gave him the "take" sign all the way. The bat was just a prop. If it left his shoulder, it was a $100 fine. Lefty walked. The next day, the papers reported "Lefty Gomez's keen eye ignited a Yankee rally." Another time, in the last inning of a Series game, with two on, the hitter smashed a vicious liner at second baseman Tony Lazzeri's chest. Lazzeri grabbed it and doubled a runner to end the game. "Gomez got the last man by forcing him into a double play," the reporters wrote. Says Lefty: "Lazzeri coughed for six weeks."

When the Back Bay rich boy from Harvard, Charlie Devens, showed up to pitch for the Yankees, he came into camp with a steamer trunk with glamorous labels, "Biarritz," "Adlon Hotel," "Monte Carlo," "Nice," 'The Ritz" and "Athens" on it. Left surveyed this for a minute. "You ever been to the Robert Treat in Newark?" he asked Devens. Devens shook his head. "You better leave some place on that trunk for it. You will," Lefty told him. The Yankees' minor league farm was Newark those days.

One of Lefty's last capers involved bringing a lantern to bat against Bob Feller one dark, rainy game. "Knock it off. You can see Feller," snapped the umpire. "I just wanna make damn sure Feller can see ME!" retorted Vernon.

In the Series game against the Giants' rookie pitcher Cliff Melton who, Lefty said, had ears that "looked like a taxi with the doors open," Lefty called time in an early inning to complain that Melton's ears were making a bad background for the hitters to hit against. He recommended painting them green.

Lefty has returned to his native California now and is now living in Fairfax. He thinks the players today are not better but smarter. "They asked us once how we managed to pitch that altitude in Denver, and I told the guy I usually walk him." Now 60, he still keeps a wary eye out for the righthanded world which he sure is out to get him. Someone asked him if he thought his Series record, six games won with no defeats, would stand up. Lefty thought a moment. "Well," he said, "I don't think I'm gonna lose any."

Giants Sign Draft Pick

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

SAN FRANCISCO — The San Francisco Giants have signed Kyle Hypes, a 19-year-old southpaw pitcher chosen in the third round of the free agent draft.

Hypes, who was 10-0 with Santana High School near San Diego, will be assigned to Great Falls, Mont., of the Pioneer League.

Tennis

BRISTOL, England — Rod Laver came from behind last night to beat fellow Australian professional Owen Davidson, 4-6, 6-2, 8-6 to enter the men's singles finals of the Wills $25,000 Open Lawn Tennis Championships. Laver goes in the finals today against Nikki Pilic of Yugoslava, who won a semifinals victory over Australia's John Newcombe, 4-6, 14-12, 8-6.

In the women's singles finals, Margaret Court of Australia defeated France's Francoise Durr, 6-1, 6-1.

BRISTOL, England — Pancho Gonzales, last year's Wimbledon hero when he won a five hour marathon match from Charlie Parasell, Santurce, P.R., has decided to skip the All-England tennis championships, which start June 22.

The 42-year-old Gonzales believes two weeks of intense competition is now too much for him, his agent John McDonald said yesterday, adding, "Consequently I have asked the Wimbledon referee to withdraw his name."

Baseball

LOS ANGELES — Chicago Cubs centerfielder Cleo James was hospitalized last night with a fractured cheekbone. He was injured when hit by a ball while warming up with a teammate in the outfield between innings during last night's game against the Dodgers. It was not known how long he would be sidelined.

MARY BACON
Becomes a mudder

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Cardinals sent southpaw pitcher Santiago Guzon to their Tulsa AAA farm club for the second time this season yesterday. He appeared in only 13 innings with an ERA of 7.61 and a won-lost record of 1-1.

ATHENS, Ohio — Bob Wren, Ohio University baseball coach, has been named NCAA district four baseball coach of the year by the NCAA baseball coaches committee after leading his team to a 31-4 season and the Mid-American Conference title.

Horse Racing

MIAMI — Mary Bacon yesterday asked racing stewards at Tropical Park for an extension of her apprentice jockey allowance. The pretty 20-year-old wife of jockey Johnie Dale Bacon claims she is entitled to a three week extension to make up for riding time lost when she was pregnant last winter. Her apprentice allowance expires July 21.

Hockey

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League yesterday traded right wing George Swarbrick to the Philadelphia Flyers for defenseman Terry Ball.

Ball, 26, played in 61 games with the Flyers, scoring 25 points on seven goals and 18 assists. Swarbrick played most of last season with the Penguins' Baltimore Clipper farm team in the AHL.

Golf

SUTTON, Mass. — Favorites Kathy Whitworth and Shirley Englehorn share the lead at the halfway mark of the $30,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association Championship at Pleasant Valley Country Club. Miss Englehorn, who has won her last three outings, shot her second straight 70 yesterday to tie her with Miss Whitworth, a loser in her last seven tournaments.

Yachting

STAMFORD, Conn. — Crews for Valiant, Heritage and Intrepid began preparing today for America's Cup observation trials that begin on July 7 off Newport, R.I. The three yachts, competing for the right to be the America's Cup defender against either France or Australia in September, finished preliminary shakedown trials Friday, during which Valiant and Intrepid each had four victories. Heritage, a late arrival from Florida, lost both her outings.

General

SAN FRANCISCO — Douglas A. Fessenden, retired chairman of the physical education department at San Francisco State and former University of Montana football coach, died Thursday following a brief illness at the age of 69. He served at S.F. state from 1953 to 1966, during which time the school's varsity sports improved considerably among small college ranks.

Bowling

PORTLAND, Ore. — Butch Gearhart of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., rolled a six-game series of 1,336 last night to lead 15 others into today's finals of the $32,000 Portland Open bowling tournament.

Gearhart, who almost withdrew because of an injured toe on his left foot, ran his four round total to 5,310, seven pins better than veteran Dave Soutar of Gilroy, Calif. Soutar had led Gearhart by 10 points after the third round yesterday afternoon.

USC Has Back To Wall After NCAA Setback

OMAHA, Neb. (UPI) —The Southern California Trojans had their backs to the wall as the 24th annual NCAA College World Series went into its second day today.

The Trojans, ranked first in the nation going into the playoffs, were defeated Friday night by the fourth-rated Ohio University Bobcats, (32-4) who put on an all-around display of solid play in getting past the favored team, 4-1.

Southern California (47-13) must defeat Delaware (22-5) in today's contest to stay alive in the double-elimination meet. Texas, No. 2 in the country at 37-6, blasted Delaware, 12-4, Friday night in the opening game of the series.

Ed Robbins, a hard-throwing right hander who is now undefeated in 14 games, held the Trojans to two hits during the seven innings he pitched. His reliever, Ed Raushch, allowed only one safe blow during his two-inning stint.

The Bobcats slammed nine safeties off the combined offerings of Jim Barr and Brent Strom, the two aces of the Trojan staff.

Raider Fullback Has High Hopes

OAKLAND (UPI) —The Oakland Raiders were pro football's winningest football team during the regular season in 1969.

Yet they suffered from inconsistency at the fullback spot, where injury-ridden Hewritt Dixon dropped off drastically from his superb rushing and receiving years of 1967-68.

"I'm looking forward to returning to my 1967-68 form," Dixon said yesterday, "As far as I'm concerned I'm 100 per cent healthy."

Dixon will have to contend with second year pro Marv Hubbard who explains bluntly, "I want the job. I want to be right up there in league rushing...in the top ten."

Ex-Card Hurler Pierotti Dies

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Funeral arrangements are pending for Adolph "Babe" Pierotti, a San Francisco resident who appeared briefly in the major leagues with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Pierotti collapsed and died at the age of 70 of an apparent heart seizure Thursday during a round of golf.

He played several years in the Cardinals' system before becoming a St. Louis scout under Branch Rickey.

FIRST TRIP

Although a very serious swimming competitor, she is also a teen-age girl and it comes out loud and clear when you ask if she's looking forward for the Hawaii trip, her first time to the Islands.

"I hope I get a chance to surf," she bubbled. "My swim coach (Art Octavio of San Francisco) was raised on the Islands and I've heard so much about them."

Robin learned to swim at the ripe old age of 3 and by the time she was 8 was swimming like a fish. Larry Lack, then coaching the San Rafael Swim Club, and also serving as recreation life guard at the San Rafael High School pool, saw this little fish-like creature swimming below him and immediately called her over.

How would you like to come out for the team? asked Lack, and her days of competitive swimming were under way.

SWITCHED CLUBS

After swimming for the San Rafael Swim Club a couple of years, she switched to the Marin Pirates which later became the Marin Swim Club. When coach Art Octavio and Marin S.C. came to a parting of the ways, some of the swimmers went with him and formed the Dolphins of Marin. That is the club in which Robin now belongs. With about 20 swimmers on the team, it is one of the smaller Marin clubs.

Robin's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Bachrach, have two other daughters, both in their 30s.

Miss Bachrach, who is continuing in competitive swimming "because I like it, because I feel it is fun," practices twice a day, about an hour in the mornings and two hours in the afternoons, and works with weight exercises.

So keep your eye on Robin, a girl that started breaking national age group records at 10. She's getting even better.

Brazilian Ref Cleared Of World Soccer Charge

MEXICO CITY (UPI)—The International Football Federation (FIFA) Friday ruled that Mexico, despite appeals, must play its World Soccer Cup quarterfinal Sunday at a tiny provencial steadium instead of massive Aztec Stadium.

The Federation also cleared Brazilian referee Airton Vieira De Moraes of bribery allegations.

Mexico lost the draw for the right to remain in Mexico City with Russia getting the privilege. Both teams had tied on points and goals for leadership of group I. The winning team has the right to remain at the original site of group play while the runnerup has to travel.

News that Mexico had lost out and had to travel to Toluca, 65 miles northwest of Mexico City, to play Italy before 29,360 fans caused dismay in local soccer circles.

TRAFFIC PROBLEMS

Officials hastened to point out to the FIFA that "massive traffic and other problems" would be caused by the Mexican trip. Italy agreed to Mexico's appeal for a switch, provided the game was played Monday instead of Sunday. Italy and Mexico both asked for the semifinal to be put back one day from June 17.

But the FIFA spokesman said the executive committee refused to make the change because "Toluca has been chosen as a quarterfinal site long ago." The spokesman said measures would be taken to ease the traffic jams in the area of Toluca's Sosal Arena.

The executive committee also closed the case of allegations of bribery against De Moraes. FIFA, in an official statement, said their investigations showed that De Moraes "at no time made financial demands on Uruguayan or Swedish football association officials" as alleged in "malicious rumors."

A CONVERSATION

In fact, said FIFA, the investigation revealed the rumors "originated from a conversation between Swedish journalists and a journalist from Brazil who could not subsequently be identified."

De Moraes was plucked from officiating at the Sweden-Uruguay game June 10 by FIFA President, Sir Stanley Rous, a few hours before kickoff. He denied the allegations and FIFA said Sir Stanley showed "the fullest confidence in his integrity by appointing him to officiate at other matches . . . the matter should now be considered closed."

The eight quarterfinalists worked on their strategy Friday in preparation for Sunday's matches.

Russia plays Uruguay in Mexico City, Italy plays Mexico at Toluca, Brazil meets Puer at Guadalajara and England takes on West Germany at Leon.

Pirate's No-Hitter Gets Big Assist By Mazeroski

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Dock Ellis is big and wild and fast.

Yet in only his third season of major league baseball he's knocking at the Hall of Fame.

Ellis, 25, a Los Angeles native, pitched the first no-hit game of the season Friday night when he turned back the San Diego Padres 2-0.

His no-hitter was preserved in the seventh inning when second baseman Bill Mazeroski made a diving catch of Ramon Webster's liner. The run-scoring department was taken care of nicely by Willie Stargell who hit two homers.

Ellis was his usual wild self. He walked eight men and hit one. He struck out six. It was not exactly a classic no-hitter. He retired the side in order only in the second, seventh and ninth innings. The Padres had runners on first and second via walks in the first, fifth and sixth innings.

The no-hitter was the first game of a twinight doubleheader. In the second game, the Padres grabbed a 5-2 victory. Southpaw Danny Coombs pitched only the second complete game of his eight-year career, Al Ferrara hit a homer and a single and Nate Colbert got a pair of triples.

When Webster hit his hazardous liner in the seventh of the first game Pirate catcher Jerry May said, "I thought it was a hit."

Mazeroski dove to his right, landed on his belly and caught the ball before it hit the dirt.

EASIEST GAME

"That was one heck of a play," said May. The catcher said, "It was the easiest game I've ever caught. I didn't feel any pressure until the ninth."

Ellis, a 6 foot 3 inch 200-pounder felt pressure all right.

"I didn't think I had good enough stuff to throw a no-hitter," he said afterwards. "I thought about the no-hitter from the fourth inning. I know guys who don't want to talk about it but if you're going to throw it, you're going to throw it. I was nervous in the ninth but I was trying to relax."

Walking so many batters didn't bother him, he said. "The ball I was throwing was moving and I was keeping the ball away from the hitters," he said.

The Padres stole three bases but that didn't matter either.

"My main problem ever since I've been pitching is holding men on, he said.

Tackle Ron Mix Still Undecided

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Offensive tackle Ron Mix said recently he still is undecided on whether he will end his retirement and play for the Oakland Raiders.

Mix, 31, an all-leaguer most of his 10 seasons with the San Diego Chargers, was traded last week to the Raiders for two future draft choices. The deal depends upon his decision to play.

Mix told a meeting of sportswriters and sportscasters that he has talked with Al Davis, Oakland managing owner, in "general terms" — mainly about his physical condition. He missed most of the 1969 season with a pulled hamstring muscle before announcing his retirement last December.

Star playmaker of Michigan State's 1969-70 basketball team was 5-foot-5 guard Gary Ganakas, son of the head Sartan coach, Gus Ganakas.

Lotz Second In Winnings

NEW YORK (AP) — Dick Lotz, winner of the Kemper Open last Sunday, climbed one notch to second place this week in pro golf's money-winning standings.

Lotz' $30,000 purse at Kemper boosted his 1970 winnings to $105,951, behind Lee Trevino's leading $109,583 figure this year. Gary Player, who has returned to his home in South Africa, slipped to third with $88,078.

Bob Lunn was fourth with $72,968 and Miller Barber, fifth with $71,906.

Rounding out the top ten were, Billy Casper, with $69,483; Frank Beard, $68,292; Homero Blancas, $67,711; Dave Hill, $67,581 and Jack Nicklaus, $66,329.

Once, when he was at bat and the team was trailing, the manager gave him the "take" sign all the way. The bat was just a prop. If it left his shoulder, it was a $100 fine. Lefty walked. The next day, the papers reported "Lefty Gomez's keen eye ignited a Yankee rally." Another time, in the last inning of a Series game, with two on, the hitter smashed a vicious liner at second baseman Tony Lazzeri's chest. Lazzeri grabbed it and doubled a runner to end the game. "Gomez got the last man by forcing him into a double play," the reporters wrote. Says Lefty: "Lazzeri coughed for six weeks."

When the Back Bay rich boy from Harvard, Charlie Devens, showed up to pitch for the Yankees, he came into camp with a steamer trunk with glamorous labels, "Biarritz," "Adlon Hotel," "Monte Carlo," "Nice," 'The Ritz" and "Athens" on it. Left surveyed this for a minute. "You ever been to the Robert Treat in Newark?" he asked Devens. Devens shook his head. "You better leave some place on that trunk for it. You will," Lefty told him. The Yankees' minor league farm was Newark those days.

One of Lefty's last capers involved bringing a lantern to bat against Bob Feller one dark, rainy game. "Knock it off. You can see Feller," snapped the umpire. "I just wanna make damn sure Feller can see ME!" retorted Vernon.

In the Series game against the Giants' rookie pitcher Cliff Melton who, Lefty said, had ears that "looked like a taxi with the doors open," Lefty called time in an early inning to complain that Melton's ears were making a bad background for the hitters to hit against. He recommended painting them green.

Lefty has returned to his native California now and is now living in Fairfax. He thinks the players today are not better but smarter. "They asked us once how we managed to pitch that altitude in Denver, and I told the guy I usually walk him." Now 60, he still keeps a wary eye out for the righthanded world which he sure is out to get him. Someone asked him if he thought his Series record, six games won with no defeats, would stand up. Lefty thought a moment. "Well," he said, "I don't think I'm gonna lose any."

Giants Sign Draft Pick

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

SAN FRANCISCO — The San Francisco Giants have signed Kyle Hypes, a 19-year-old southpaw pitcher chosen in the third round of the free agent draft.

Hypes, who was 10-0 with Santana High School near San Diego, will be assigned to Great Falls, Mont., of the Pioneer League.

Tennis

BRISTOL, England — Rod Laver came from behind last night to beat fellow Australian professional Owen Davidson, 4-6, 6-2, 8-6 to enter the men's singles finals of the Wills $25,000 Open Lawn Tennis Championships. Laver goes in the finals today against Nikki Pilic of Yugoslava, who won a semifinals victory over Australia's John Newcombe, 4-6, 14-12, 8-6.

In the women's singles finals, Margaret Court of Australia defeated France's Francoise Durr, 6-1, 6-1.

BRISTOL, England — Pancho Gonzales, last year's Wimbledon hero when he won a five hour marathon match from Charlie Parasell, Santurce, P.R., has decided to skip the All-England tennis championships, which start June 22.

The 42-year-old Gonzales believes two weeks of intense competition is now too much for him, his agent John McDonald said yesterday, adding, "Consequently I have asked the Wimbledon referee to withdraw his name."

Baseball

LOS ANGELES — Chicago Cubs centerfielder Cleo James was hospitalized last night with a fractured cheekbone. He was injured when hit by a ball while warming up with a teammate in the outfield between innings during last night's game against the Dodgers. It was not known how long he would be sidelined.

MARY BACON
Becomes a mudder

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Cardinals sent southpaw pitcher Santiago Guzon to their Tulsa AAA farm club for the second time this season yesterday. He appeared in only 13 innings with an ERA of 7.61 and a won-lost record of 1-1.

ATHENS, Ohio — Bob Wren, Ohio University baseball coach, has been named NCAA district four baseball coach of the year by the NCAA baseball coaches committee after leading his team to a 31-4 season and the Mid-American Conference title.

Horse Racing

MIAMI — Mary Bacon yesterday asked racing stewards at Tropical Park for an extension of her apprentice jockey allowance. The pretty 20-year-old wife of jockey Johnie Dale Bacon claims she is entitled to a three week extension to make up for riding time lost when she was pregnant last winter. Her apprentice allowance expires July 21.

Hockey

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League yesterday traded right wing George Swarbrick to the Philadelphia Flyers for defenseman Terry Ball.

Ball, 26, played in 61 games with the Flyers, scoring 25 points on seven goals and 18 assists. Swarbrick played most of last season with the Penguins' Baltimore Clipper farm team in the AHL.

Will Peripheral Canal Help Or Damage The Delta?

When the Chinese coolies labored a century ago to raise the levees which created the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta area as we know it today, little could they imagine what it would lead to.

Today's battle over whether or not to build the Peripheral Canal is not likely to end soon.

Don Pinkerton, an unsuccessful candidate for Republican nomination for state senate from the district which includes Marin, mentioned the Peripheral Canal from time to time in his campaign. Most of his Marin listeners didn't know what he was talking about.

Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan and his administration support the project which was the brainchild of the administration of Democrat Pat Brown, when he was governor.

Jesse Unruh, Democratic candidate for governor against Reagan, stands four square against the plan.

We are likely to hear much more about it as the Reagan-Unruh campaign develops.

DESCRIBED IN THE SIMPLEST possible terms, the Peripheral Canal would be a huge concrete riverbed constructed around the heart of the Delta area to carry water from the Secramento River to a pumping station at Tracy where it would be sent south by canal for use agriculturally in the southern San Joaquin Valley and domestically in southern California.

It would cost an estimated $200 million to build and would be financed jointly by state and federal funds.

It has always been envisioned as a key link in the California water plan approved by voters in a statewide election about a decade ago.

UNRUH AND SEN. JOHN Nejedly of Contra Costa County have introduced a measure in the Legislature at Sacramento to block construction of the Peripheral Canal. In Washington, Congressman Jerome Waldie, also of Contra Costa, is battling against congressional approval of the project.

Southern California representatives at Sacramento and Washington presumably will be battling just as hard for approval. Governor Reagan and his administration — including Secretary Norman B. Livermore Jr., of the California Resources Agency — are among the most outspoken proponents.

PRESSURE GROUPS INVOLVED include the Sierra Club and other conservation groups who support the status quo and oppose change in the Delta; fish and game groups who would like to see existing fisheries and waterfowl hunting areas protected and improved, and recreational boaters who want to keep the Delta open for small craft navigation.

In simplest terms, those who oppose the Peripheral Canal say it would reduce the flow of fresh water in Delta waterways thereby raising the level of pollution, destroy fisheries, impair waterfowl habitat and interfere with small craft navigation. The threat of salt water intrusion from increased tidal action is also voiced early and often.

Supporters of the project point out that it would provide nine outlets for inrefusing fresh water into Delta waterways including some sloughs that now are stagnant habitat would be improved, pollution decreased and attractiveness to boaters enhanced. Salt water intrusion, say proponents, is not a threat at all.

Supplying surplus northern water to areas that need it is an important and worthwhile reason to go ahead.

THERE YOU HAVE IT.

It comes down to a question of whom do you believe. Both sides can produce mountains of study data to back up their respective contentions.

One important study is not yet complete. It is the one in progress at the Corps of Engineers Bay Model in Sausalito. When its results are known, they may shed more light on the situation.

It is a good bet that the Bay Model study report will be roundly applauded by those whose position it seems to support and vehemently denounced by those from whose position it seems to detract.

WHEN YOU HEAR cries of anguish about possible threats to the balance of nature, you can enjoy a good chuckle in the knowledge that the delta as we know it is the product of man, in the form of the Chinese coolie of the 19th Century.

Natural fishery?

The striped bass is not a native of the West Coast. It was imported by man a couple of generations ago.

Livermore recently commented to a Marin audience that all water development projects are NOT necessarily bad. One might expand that idea and conclude that all of man's meddling with nature isn't bad.

Bully for the Chinese coolies who built the delta levees and bully for the man who brought the first striped bass to Northern California.

Bouquets And Brickbats

A BOUQUET to Sears Roebuck for ending years of rumors with a public announcement of the firm intention to build a full-size store in Marin — at Northgate.

A BOUQUET to Petaluma Police Chief Larry D. Higgins for continuing his efforts to promote personal contacts between citizens and police by way of his programs to get patrolmen out of cars and onto the sidewalk as well as offering "ride along" invitations to citizens to accompany patrolmen in police cars.

BRICKBATS to acting county planning director Albert Solnit for telling planning commissioners that operations of the $400,000 per year department would fall apart if he couldn't get one new typewriter and a new copying machine. The organization of that department has got to be in deplorable shape if it is so close to collapse — on a $400,000 a year budget.

A BOUQUET to the Miwok Archeological Preserve Committee of Marin for its efforts to preserve an Indian mound at Marinwood. "May its tribe increase" — the MAPCM's tribe, that is.

A BOUQUET to the California Toll Bridge Authority for promising a toll reduction on the Richmond-San Rafael bridge effective July 1.

The reduction should have come sooner and it should be more than the contemplated 10 cents, but better late and little than never.

The Work Of Summer

For Marinites who garden, summer is the time of most work and most reward — especially in the vegetable line.

A goodly portion of the summer garden work is watering. In this no-rain summer clime watering is an absolute must.

Some plants, such as hydrangeas and fuchsias, require almost daily libations. Lawns require much water.

In this small area we must be thankful. Not every place in California has such an abundance of water. But even here it is a finite resource.

This summer, as we water, we will think how very lucky we were not to have been born nomadic tribesmen in the harsh, dry reaches of the Sahara.

Make Sears Point More Popular Spot

This letter is to try and keep Sears Point Raceway from being sold to a land developer. This area needs more people like India does. Our roads and towns are already crowded, and more people would only cause over crowding and more pollution. What this area does need is more recreation for the young and young at heart. The equipment is available, but the owners aren't.

The loss of revenue at Sears Point may be attributed to three main reasons. (1) Poor management by Filmways, (2) not enough races for the small guy, (3) and high prices. Six to eight races a year are certainly not enough to help finance an investment like Sears Point. The money will come from small guys who would like to race on weekends and not from a few big names for people to come to see. If Fremont Drag Strip can run a weekly program such as they do, why can't Sears Point? . . .

Filmways should hire a small permanent staff for weekly events at Sears Point. Then they should get several doctors that are more civic minded than mercenary, to be at trackside. Private concessions could be hired on a percentage basis. For such races as grandprix and road racing, the SCCA (Sports Car Club of America), (who sponsors most of those races) provides personnel on a voluntary basis to help the track. Clean up wouldn't be so bad if there were more disposal units. Also, if there were more races open to the small guy, then the increased revenue could absorb the cost of maintenance. If this process can work profitably in other areas, why not here? . . .

For the amount of money invested in Sears Point, and the number of auto and motorcycle enthusiasts in this area, don't you think that these ideas are at least worth a try? You, as the editor of this paper, have a lot of power and could be a moving force in getting Filmways to reconsider selling Sears Point . . . I would be willing to help in the organization of such an effort, and I would certainly hate to see such an opportunity like this go down the drain . . .

Omissions Charged In Classroom Issue

The spate of letters recently in defense of the present method of handling American Government classes at Drake High School are interesting not in content, but in what is purposely left out.

Mr. Lim carefully avoided mentioning that of the long list of "opposite view" speakers he supposedly has presented his classes, at least three-fourths of them did not appear before the American Government class first period this last school year. Who refuted the statement to students by the hippy that there is nothing in the Bible against adultery? Who refuted the Gay Liberation member's statement that 90 per cent of the students would have homosexual tendencies? Who refuted Mr. Lim's statement to his class that he fully expected to teach in the nude within five years — to nude classes?

A course in American Government is required so that our youngsters may know at least as much as the foreign born becoming citizens. . . .

Some of our teachers receive over $14,000 per year in salary to teach American Government. Would the citizens, parents and taxpayers willingly pay this amount to someone arranging for controversial speakers rather than imparting the required necessary material?

Student Answers Writer's Charges

I would like to comment on the letter, "A New Low in Our Sick Society," written by Judy Emis and published May 21. In that letter Mrs. Emis claims that in Roger T. Lim's American Government class (A) no textbook is followed, (B) that there is no flag salute, (C) that a member of the Gay Liberation Front, a homosexual, was allowed to speak of his "marriages" to other men, and also (D) that cans of beer are openly consumed in class.

I would like to answer Mrs. Emis's charges.

(A) Mr. Lim does not use a textbook because there is no adequate textbook readily available. Textbooks supplied to him are either out-of-date, or they do not meet Mr. Lim's high standards.

(B) State law requires "a patriotic observance" at the beginning of the school day, not specifically a salute to the flag. The study of American Government is a highly patriotic function in itself.

(C) A member of the Gay Liberation Front did speak briefly to Mr. Lim's American Government students, LAST OCTOBER. Perhaps the man said more than was expected. When Mr. Lim, or any teacher, turns the floor over to a speaker, he has little or no control over what that person might say.

Mr. Lim has people come in to lecture from both sides of the platform, so to speak. Political parties, anti-war organizations, groups supporting the Administration, all have a fair chance to present their views. And most certainly the students have a voice in chooisng speakers.

(D) Never at any time has beer been consumed in Mr. Lim's American Government class, nor any other of his classes. This is a gross untruth.

Mr. Lim is an excellent and highly qualified instructor in the field of Social Studies. His perfect record is, and will continue to be, unmarred by false charges brought against him by a frustrated group of muckrakers, Mrs. Emis included.

Learning About Prisoners One Of Indochina War Frustrations

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In frustration and sheer despair no aspect of the Indochina War compares with the plight of the 1,400 or more Americans missing in action and their wives and families. Some wives have gone four — even five — years without knowing whether their husbands are dead or alive.

EFFORTS TO EXPLOIT this grief for the larger objectives of America's dilemma in the war have from time to time seemed to put the families of these hapless men in a political role. There is no evidence that this has been by choice of the wives. They have wanted to get, by any means possible, at the very least, word of the fate of their husbands.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., introduced an amendment to the military appropriations bill that was the most open invitation thus far to tie a political issue to the plight of the prisoners. As a counter to the Cooper-Church amendment he proposed that any legislative restrictions on the president's right to order future military operations in Cambodia would be forbidden so long as American prisoners were held in Cambodia.

The Dole amendment was defeated, 54 to 36, with 15 Republicans joining 39 Democrats to vote against it. One reason was the conviction that the amendment did make the captives pawns in a political byplay.

REPEATED ATTEMPTS by a variety of means to get information about the prisoners have brought only minimum results. A number of wives have gone to Paris and other European capitals to put their case to Communist representatives. While in most instances they have been received politely, they have been told nothing.

On the Meet the Press program Sweden's Prime Minister Olof Palme was pressed hard to say what he had been able to do through North Vietnamese representatives in Stockholm about the prisoners of war. Palme said that of 60 appeals put up to him he had received replies in 14 cases. Among the latter were the names of several men whose fate had already been made known.

The Prime Minister said that he wanted to avoid making the prisoners a political issue and keep it on the humanitarian plane. hanoi is a signatory of the covenant of the International Red Cross covering the treatment of prisoners of war. But the North Vietnamese government holds that the men they have taken are war criminals and, therefore, not subject to the terms of the covenant. The fact that the United States has never formally declared war is at least a technical consideration in the status of these victims of the long conflict.

IT GOES, HOWEVER, much deeper than that. Individual human life has nothing like the same value in Asia that it has in the West. And the ruthless drive of the doctrinaire Communist adds an extra dimension to this difference in values. Then, too, there is the deep bitterness generated by thes uffering of the civilian population from long years of bombing in the two Vietnams. The last is part of the fearful heritage that peace is not likely soon to erase.

State Department officials who talked with Palme were impressed by his sincerity and by the realism of his efforts to get more information out of Hanoi. Under the prisoners-of-war convention Sweden could propose the interment until the end of the war of sick and wounded men. Given the adamant stand of Hanoi, that seems a remote possibility. The grim reality appears to be that these unfortunate men will not be released, granted they have survived the rigors of their captivity, until there is a negotiated peace.

THE MOST SPECTACULAR effort to improve their condition and discover whether they were living or dead came from H. Ross Perot, the Texas billionaire. Just before Christmas he was turned back attempting to deliver canned Christmas dinners to 1,400 prisoners. An attempt to deliver the dinners and other gifts for the captives by way of the Soviet Union was also frustrated when Perot was denied permission to fly to Moscow.

How Not To Make Peace With Member Of Women's Liberation

WASHINGTON — The Women's Liberation people take themselves very seriously and well they might. It's very hard to say anything to them without getting them very mad. While I have no idea what you should say to someone in Women's Lib, here are some of the things you should not say:

"WELL NOW THAT you've got your college degree, I suppose you're going to find yourself a husband."

"You ought to meet Hugh Hefner — he's your kind of guy."

"How do you like this picture of the sexy girl in a bathing suit?"

"Have you heard the latest one about the woman driver who . . ."

"What's the name of your hairdresser?"

"I suppose if you take this job, you'll probably become pregnant."

"YOU WOMEN GO IN the other room. We'll stay here for cigars and cognac."

"Wouldn't you hate to be married to a man who makes as much money as you do?"

"Here, let me light your cigarette for you."

"For a woman, you play very well."

"My mother always did something stupid like that herself."

"There's a gal in our office who is as good at selling as any man."

"Hey look, there's a lady taxi driver!"

"WE'D BE HAPPY to let you in the press box — it's just that we don't have any lavatory facilities."

"Ha, ha, ha . . . A woman President, that's a good one. Ho, ho, ho."

"Would you like to go out to Lady's Day at the ball park?"

"The thing I like about you the best is your legs."

"I met this woman doctor the other day, at the hospital, and she really seemed to know what she was doing."

"What do you think about when you're having a baby?"

"I beg your pardon, ma'am, is the head of the house home?"

"Would you like to feel my muscle?"

"SHOW ME A WOMAN who really likes working and I'll show you a woman who likes other women."

"A penny for your thoughts."

"Hi, how's the better half feeling?"

"Don't feel bad, I even know men who don't understand it."

"No, sit down and join us. We have nothing important to say."

"The newspaper just arrived. Would you like the women's page?"

"Listen, I'm the first one to admit women have gotten a raw deal, but the majority of them wouldn't have it any other way."

"Meet me at the lady's entrance of the club at 5 o'clock."

ANY OF THE ABOVE statements can cause a Women's Lib backer to get uptight, but if you really want to see her climb the wall start singing:

"You've come a long way, baby,

"To get where you got to today.

"You've got your own cigarette now baby,

"You've come a long, long way."

Will Peripheral Canal Help Or Damage The Delta?

When the Chinese coolies labored a century ago to raise the levees which created the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta area as we know it today, little could they imagine what it would lead to.

Today's battle over whether or not to build the Peripheral Canal is not likely to end soon.

Don Pinkerton, an unsuccessful candidate for Republican nomination for state senate from the district which includes Marin, mentioned the Peripheral Canal from time to time in his campaign. Most of his Marin listeners didn't know what he was talking about.

Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan and his administration support the project which was the brainchild of the administration of Democrat Pat Brown, when he was governor.

Jesse Unruh, Democratic candidate for governor against Reagan, stands four square against the plan.

We are likely to hear much more about it as the Reagan-Unruh campaign develops.

DESCRIBED IN THE SIMPLEST possible terms, the Peripheral Canal would be a huge concrete riverbed constructed around the heart of the Delta area to carry water from the Secramento River to a pumping station at Tracy where it would be sent south by canal for use agriculturally in the southern San Joaquin Valley and domestically in southern California.

It would cost an estimated $200 million to build and would be financed jointly by state and federal funds.

State Department officials who talked with Palme were impressed by his sincerity and by the realism of his efforts to get more information out of Hanoi. Under the prisoners-of-war convention Sweden could propose the interment until the end of the war of sick and wounded men. Given the adamant stand of Hanoi, that seems a remote possibility. The grim reality appears to be that these unfortunate men will not be released, granted they have survived the rigors of their captivity, until there is a negotiated peace.

THE MOST SPECTACULAR effort to improve their condition and discover whether they were living or dead came from H. Ross Perot, the Texas billionaire. Just before Christmas he was turned back attempting to deliver canned Christmas dinners to 1,400 prisoners. An attempt to deliver the dinners and other gifts for the captives by way of the Soviet Union was also frustrated when Perot was denied permission to fly to Moscow.

How Not To Make Peace With Member Of Women's Liberation

WASHINGTON — The Women's Liberation people take themselves very seriously and well they might. It's very hard to say anything to them without getting them very mad. While I have no idea what you should say to someone in Women's Lib, here are some of the things you should not say:

"WELL NOW THAT you've got your college degree, I suppose you're going to find yourself a husband."

"You ought to meet Hugh Hefner — he's your kind of guy."

"How do you like this picture of the sexy girl in a bathing suit?"

"Have you heard the latest one about the woman driver who . . ."

"What's the name of your hairdresser?"

"I suppose if you take this job, you'll probably become pregnant."

"YOU WOMEN GO IN the other room. We'll stay here for cigars and cognac."

"Wouldn't you hate to be married to a man who makes as much money as you do?"

"Here, let me light your cigarette for you."

"For a woman, you play very well."

"My mother always did something stupid like that herself."

"There's a gal in our office who is as good at selling as any man."

"Hey look, there's a lady taxi driver!"

"WE'D BE HAPPY to let you in the press box — it's just that we don't have any lavatory facilities."

"Ha, ha, ha . . . A woman President, that's a good one. Ho, ho, ho."

"Would you like to go out to Lady's Day at the ball park?"

"The thing I like about you the best is your legs."

"I met this woman doctor the other day, at the hospital, and she really seemed to know what she was doing."

"What do you think about when you're having a baby?"

"I beg your pardon, ma'am, is the head of the house home?"

"Would you like to feel my muscle?"

"SHOW ME A WOMAN who really likes working and I'll show you a woman who likes other women."

"A penny for your thoughts."

"Hi, how's the better half feeling?"

"Don't feel bad, I even know men who don't understand it."

"No, sit down and join us. We have nothing important to say."

"The newspaper just arrived. Would you like the women's page?"

"Listen, I'm the first one to admit women have gotten a raw deal, but the majority of them wouldn't have it any other way."

"Meet me at the lady's entrance of the club at 5 o'clock."

ANY OF THE ABOVE statements can cause a Women's Lib backer to get uptight, but if you really want to see her climb the wall start singing:

"You've come a long way, baby,

"To get where you got to today.

"You've got your own cigarette now baby,

"You've come a long, long way."

COUNTRY PARSON

"A man isn't likely to have money for his needs if he's spent it on his wants."

WEEK IN BUSINESS

Liquidity Bugaboos Worrying Big Firms

By ROBERT J. REGAN

NEW YORK (UPI) — The revolving stage of economic troubles turned the corporate liquidity problem toward stage center this week as the spotlight fell on Penn Central Co.'s financial difficulties.

Simply stated, liquidity is a measure of the ability of a company to raise enough cash to meet debts as they mature. More important than the cash, or short-term investment that can be easily converted to cash, is its relationship to the debts that have to be paid off.

The top-level shakeup at Penn Central, which saw Stuart T. Saunders replaced as chairman and chief executive officer by Paul A. Gorman plus a number of other high level changes, came less than two weeks after the Pennsy withdrew an unsuccessful $100 million debenture offering. The accompanying prospectus had disclosed the road has to pay off $106 million in maturing long-term debt this year, plus another $75 million of commercial paper maturing before June 30.

Anxious to prevent any repercussions the Pennsy's troubles might spread throughout the financial community, the Nixon administration quickly fashioned a rescue plan that apparently is heading for difficulty on Capitol Hill.

The plan involves Defense Department guarantee of bank loans of up to $200 million for the road, plus a Transportation Department bill that would provide $750 million for the ailing Pennsy and other roads in financial difficulties. Scattered, but potent opposition in Congress suggested this may be a drawn-out affair.

Ling-Temco-Vought, which has been selling off subsidiaries to alleviate its liquidity problems, this week got a clear track to proceed with its acquisition of Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp., the only major steel producer to report a net loss for the first quarter of 1970.

Federal Judge Louis Rosenburg in Pittsburgh consented to the merger after extracting a guarantee from LTV that the conglommerate would make no changes in the steel company's employee pension or other benefit funds without approval of the Justice Department.

The Reading Co., with liquidity problems of its own, has asked the Interstate Commerce

WEEK IN BUSINESS

Liquidity Bugaboos Worrying Big Firms

By ROBERT J. REGAN

NEW YORK (UPI) — The revolving stage of economic troubles turned the corporate liquidity problem toward stage center this week as the spotlight fell on Penn Central Co.'s financial difficulties.

Simply stated, liquidity is a measure of the ability of a company to raise enough cash to meet debts as they mature. More important than the cash, or short-term investment that can be easily converted to cash, is its relationship to the debts that have to be paid off.

The top-level shakeup at Penn Central, which saw Stuart T. Saunders replaced as chairman and chief executive officer by Paul A. Gorman plus a number of other high level changes, came less than two weeks after the Pennsy withdrew an unsuccessful $100 million debenture offering. The accompanying prospectus had disclosed the road has to pay off $106 million in maturing long-term debt this year, plus another $75 million of commercial paper maturing before June 30.

Anxious to prevent any repercussions the Pennsy's troubles might spread throughout the financial community, the Nixon administration quickly fashioned a rescue plan that apparently is heading for difficulty on Capitol Hill.

The plan involves Defense Department guarantee of bank loans of up to $200 million for the road, plus a Transportation Department bill that would provide $750 million for the ailing Pennsy and other roads in financial difficulties. Scattered, but potent opposition in Congress suggested this may be a drawn-out affair.

Ling-Temco-Vought, which has been selling off subsidiaries to alleviate its liquidity problems, this week got a clear track to proceed with its acquisition of Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp., the only major steel producer to report a net loss for the first quarter of 1970.

Federal Judge Louis Rosenburg in Pittsburgh consented to the merger after extracting a guarantee from LTV that the conglommerate would make no changes in the steel company's employee pension or other benefit funds without approval of the Justice Department.

The Reading Co., with liquidity problems of its own, has asked the Interstate Commerce

Commission to approve deferment of payment of $8 million on outstanding indebtedness, due in $2 million chunks on July 1, 1970 through 1973. The railroad also has asked its bondholders to ease terms of mortgage security in order to provide more working capital.

In another development, an ICC examiner cleared the proposed merger of the Illinois Central and the Gulf, Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The examiner said the merger, which now requires full ICC approval, would save the roads $10.8 million a year.

Economy through merger was one of the principal reasons for the kingsized merger (effective July 1) of Francis I. DuPont and Co. and Hirsch and Co. The combination, which takes place simultaneously with the merger of DuPont and Glore Forgan Staats and Co., will create the world's second largest brokerage firm.

Another Wall Street merger appeared to be in the wind with talks said to be nearing completion between Thompson and McKinnon Auchinloss Inc. and Blair and Co.

Over in the copper industry, long-standing combinations of producers and fabricators came under fire in an antitrust suit filed against five large integrated companies by Triangle Industries Inc. of Neward, N.J.

The company filed suit seeking treble damages against Kennecott Copper Corp., Phelps Dodge Corp., Anaconda Co., Cerro Corp., and American Smelting and Refining Co.

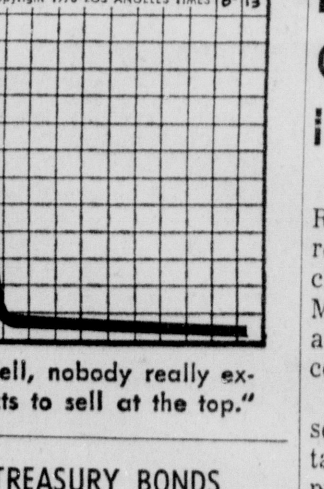
Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., which this week set price increases of 5 to 6 per cent on tires and tubes for the replacement market, found itself in an unexpected race with the B. V. Goodrich Co. for control of a large Dutch tire manufacturer, N. V. Rubberfabriek Vredestein.

In May, Vredestein agreed to issue and sell to Goodyear new shares equal to a controlling interest. Goodrich on Thursday disclosed it had been buying Vredestein stock quietly on the open market. Goodyear, which said it believes Goodrich's holdings are near the 50 per cent mark, set plans to take the matter to court in The Neatherlands.

Goodyear's tire price hikes are expected to be followed by other tire producers.

Deflation hit the stock market this week, letting out some of the buoyancy from an earlier six-session runup that carried the Dow Jones industrial average about 83 points higher.

Most of the business news was of the summer stock variety and traders spent more time reading the billboards than buying.



"Well, nobody really expects to sell at the top."

Tomales High Elects New Officers

Kirk Furlong of Tomales was elected student body president yesterday at Tomales High School.

Furlong, and other officers elected yesterday, will serve during the fall semester.

He received 105 votes to the 12 polled by Samuel Stipanov of Bodega Bay. There were 170 students registered to vote.

Daniel Thornton of Tomales, with 93 votes, defeated Linda Napoli of Marshall, with 30, for vice president. Jo Anne Damazio was elected secretary and Elaine Zetterquist reelected treasurer. The two Point Reyes Station girls were unopposed.

Betty Colbert defeated Beth Melekian, both of Inverness, by a 74-39 margin for the position of spirit and rally commissioner.

All of the cheerleader and pom-pon girl candidates received the 50-vote minimum required for election.

The cheerleaders are Linda Tremari of Bloomfield, Janice Kehoe of Inverness, Ramona Sartori of Tomales, and Beccy Anderson and Robin Noblett, both of Dillons Beach.

Pom-pon girls are Donna Tremari of Bloomfield, Betty Colbert and Elena Storer, both of Inverness, and Debbi Riley, Pam Poiani and Noel Simas, all of Point Reyes Station.

Commission to approve deferment of payment of $8 million on outstanding indebtedness, due in $2 million chunks on July 1, 1970 through 1973. The railroad also has asked its bondholders to ease terms of mortgage security in order to provide more working capital.

In another development, an ICC examiner cleared the proposed merger of the Illinois Central and the Gulf, Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The examiner said the merger, which now requires full ICC approval, would save the roads $10.8 million a year.

Economy through merger was one of the principal reasons for the kingsized merger (effective July 1) of Francis I. DuPont and Co. and Hirsch and Co. The combination, which takes place simultaneously with the merger of DuPont and Glore Forgan Staats and Co., will create the world's second largest brokerage firm.

Another Wall Street merger appeared to be in the wind with talks said to be nearing completion between Thompson and McKinnon Auchinloss Inc. and Blair and Co.

Over in the copper industry, long-standing combinations of producers and fabricators came under fire in an antitrust suit filed against five large integrated companies by Triangle Industries Inc. of Neward, N.J.

The company filed suit seeking treble damages against Kennecott Copper Corp., Phelps Dodge Corp., Anaconda Co., Cerro Corp., and American Smelting and Refining Co.

Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., which this week set price increases of 5 to 6 per cent on tires and tubes for the replacement market, found itself in an unexpected race with the B. V. Goodrich Co. for control of a large Dutch tire manufacturer, N. V. Rubberfabriek Vredestein.

In May, Vredestein agreed to issue and sell to Goodyear new shares equal to a controlling interest. Goodrich on Thursday disclosed it had been buying Vredestein stock quietly on the open market. Goodyear, which said it believes Goodrich's holdings are near the 50 per cent mark, set plans to take the matter to court in The Neatherlands.

Goodyear's tire price hikes are expected to be followed by other tire producers.

Deflation hit the stock market this week, letting out some of the buoyancy from an earlier six-session runup that carried the Dow Jones industrial average about 83 points higher.

Most of the business news was of the summer stock variety and traders spent more time reading the billboards than buying.

Tomales High Elects New Officers

Kirk Furlong of Tomales was elected student body president yesterday at Tomales High School.

Furlong, and other officers elected yesterday, will serve during the fall semester.

He received 105 votes to the 12 polled by Samuel Stipanov of Bodega Bay. There were 170 students registered to vote.

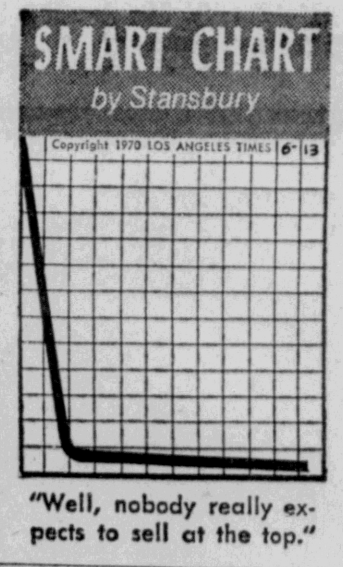
Daniel Thornton of Tomales, with 93 votes, defeated Linda Napoli of Marshall, with 30, for vice president. Jo Anne Damazio was elected secretary and Elaine Zetterquist reelected treasurer. The two Point Reyes Station girls were unopposed.

Betty Colbert defeated Beth Melekian, both of Inverness, by a 74-39 margin for the position of spirit and rally commissioner.

All of the cheerleader and pom-pon girl candidates received the 50-vote minimum required for election.

The cheerleaders are Linda Tremari of Bloomfield, Janice Kehoe of Inverness, Ramona Sartori of Tomales, and Beccy Anderson and Robin Noblett, both of Dillons Beach.

Pom-pon girls are Donna Tremari of Bloomfield, Betty Colbert and Elena Storer, both of Inverness, and Debbi Riley, Pam Poiani and Noel Simas, all of Point Reyes Station.



"Well, nobody really expects to sell at the top."

Rec Class Lists Open Next Week in Mill Valley

Mobile Home Tax Bill Hearing Set

I-J Special Report

SACRAMENTO — The Assembly Revenue and Taxation Committee is scheduled Tuesday to hear testimony on a bill that would eliminate in lieu taxes on mobile homes and place them under the property tax system provided for regular homes.

The legislation, killed by the Legislature in recent years, is sponsored by Assemblyman Eugene Chappie, R-Cool.

The Marin County Board of Supervisors, which has observed widespread growth of mobile homes in the county, is on record in favor of such a bill.

Chappie has accused Dennis Kavanagh, a lobbyist for the Golden State Mobile Homeowners League, of distributing "false and misleading" information on the measure.

"I am getting sick and tired of this line being fed to mobile home owners by Mr. Kavanagh," Chappie said in a statement. "His claims that taxes will rise on mobile homes, in particular for senior citizens, is not true."

Under his bill (AB 1765) Chappie said, a senior citizen living in a $3,000 mobile home would pay no tax after receiving the $750 homeowners' exemption. If Gov. Ronald Regan's tax package passes, he added, a senior-citizen owner of a mobile home valued at up to $4,000 would also pay no tax because the governor's package calls for an increase in the homeowners' exemption to $1,000.

Chappie said he introduced the bill at the request of many mobile home owners in the Mother Lode counties he represents. He said they were "tired of being called second-class citizens" and wanted the same exemptions entitled regular home owners.

BCDC Alternates Allowed In Competing Legislation

I-J Special Report

SACRAMENTO — Legislation that would enable members of the San Francisco Bay Conservartion and Development Commission to designate alternates was under consideration in the Senate today.

The bill, AB 1771 by Assemblyman John Dunlap, D-Vallejo, is designed to restore the proxy system of membership deleted from 1969 legislation which gave BCDC formal powers. The measure cleared the Assembly and is before the Senate Governmental Organization Committee.

It would require that proxy members be approved by BCDC but does not set any membership qualifications.

Under a bill by Sen. John F. McCarthy, R-San Rafael, however, alternates would be required to posses the same qualifications held by the appointed member. Most of the members of the commission are city councilmen or county supervisors.

McCarthy's bill, SB 1110, is also before the Governmental Organization Committee.

Assembly Passes Ban On Bay Oil Drilling

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A bill extending the state oil drilling ban to coastal and bay waters of nine Bay Area counties and Del Norte County was approved 62-0 by the Assembly Friday.

Assemblyman William T. Bagley, R-San Rafael, said his bill fills in all remaining Northern California gaps in present state offshore oil sanctuaries. It does not affect federal waters beyond the three-mile limit of state jurisdiction.

Tape Player Stolen

A $210 tape player, tapes and case were stolen from an auto belonging to Robert M. Sartorio and parked at his home, 275 Canal Street, Apt. 8, between 10:30 p.m. Wednesday and 6:30 a.m. Thursday, San Rafael police reported yesterday.

Bay Agency Urged To Buy 1.5 Million Acres Space

BERKELEY (AP) — The San Francisco Bay Area needs a regional agency to acquire and preserve about 1.5 million acres of open space, says a University of California government expert.

The nine-county agency should be elected and charged with halting urban sprawl, says T. J. Kent Jr. in an 85-page report for the UC Institute of Governmental Studies issued Thursday. It would be the first agency of its kind in the nation, he says.

The agency should acquire 1,460,000 acres of land for recreation, agriculture and other non-urban purposes, the report urges. Public open space now amounts to about 340,000 acres in the Bay Area.

Kent says, "There is a compelling need now to gain control of the Bay Area's sprawling growth and to begin governing the region to protect and make secure the environmental future of the human metropolis that man has built in the nine-county Bay Area."

Total purchase price of the land at today's prices would be about $2 billion, says Kent.

Repayment of a 30-year bond issue for this would cost about $10 annually for every Bay Area resident, and "looking back from the year 2000, a 1970 purchase at this price should represent a bargain comparable to the Dutch purchase of Manhattan Island for $24 in 1626," he added.

"If such measures are not taken," he warns, "suburban sprawl and the automobile (could) win the next and perhaps final round in the development battle now taking place in the outer ring of the Bay Area."

The new agency could be one of the first departments of a limited regional government or a permanent independent commission, he says.

Either way, he insists, it is essential for the agency to have the solid legal and political base of direct election.

"The commission's duties will bring it into head-on collision with the postwar pro-sprawl forces of suburban land development, including the state Division of Highways and the powerful combination of interest it seems to serve primarily," Kent states.

One of the agency's first steps he said, should be to impose a two-year moratorium on expansion of cities and suburbs in those areas considered vital to the future open space system.

Kent, 53, founded the Department of City and Regional Planning at Berkeley. He is president of the American Society of Planning Officials.

A Solution To The Junk Auto

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (AP) — A two-month experiment by General Motors Corp. in the vicinity of the northern Michigan resort of Traverse City may provide a solution to the problem of removing abandoned cars from rural areas.

The vehicles create eyesores on the countryside.

For the next eight weeks, GM, in cooperation with its five dealerships in the area, will remove free of charge any automobiles abandoned within 20 miles of Traverse City.

Roger M. Kyes, executive vice president of GM, said the test is to learn whether the company's program for removing abandoned autos is economically feasible.

Company officials estimate there may be 2,000 to 3,000 junked cars within the test area.

The plan calls for anyone owning or spotting an abandoned car to call a company dealer with details.

Wally Cox—His Bag Is Nature

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—"The polliwogs are plentiful in the little creek right now," said Wally Cox, the humorous man who is a regular on the panel of "The Hollywood Squares."

It's fitting in this time of ecological awareness that Wally speaks up. He has been a flower and bird watcher most of his life.

HIS BAG is nature. All wildlife, flora and fauna alike, has been his passion. While other performers swim and ski or play golf or tennis, Wally tramps the Hollywood Hills and the Santa Monica Mountains, discovering streams and canyons untouched by man.

He lives just off Mulholland Drive high in the hills in a rustic, artistic house that once consisted of five rooms. He has knocked out walls and reduced his home to three rooms: bedroom, kitchen-living room and a combination sitting room-writing room.

A secretive fellow, presumably for his own good reasons, Wally is married but keeps his wife's name to himself.

NEITHER WILL he discuss his offspring by a previous marriage.

This is his third marriage and he says it is a very happy one. Both he and Mrs. Cox are first-rate cooks. His friends are often invited to the house for Chicken Wally, frozen chicken seasoned and wrapped in foil to bake. He also cooks pork chops in beer.

A man of no pretensions, Wally works only one day a week, reporting to NBC for "The Hollywood Squares" at 6 p.m. and working until 11 p.m. —taping all five shows one after the other.

THE REST of the week he devotes to looking for work—television guest shots, movies.

His most recent film assignment is in Disney's "I'll Trade an Elk," in which Wally plays one of his favorite types, an incompetent assistant to a shady character.

Cox is working on a television special of his own, "Wally Cox's Los Angeles." He is doing all the photography himself.

"THERE WON'T be any buildings, cars, billboards or works of men in it," the actor explained. "It will consist of flowers, birds, trees, mountains, greenery and running water, all within the city limits."

Every other day he tramps the fields and hills, sometimes without his camera.

WALLY COX
A secretive but happy man

Cox and Marlon Brando, friends since childhood, see each other often, although Brando doesn't share Wally's joy for field and stream.

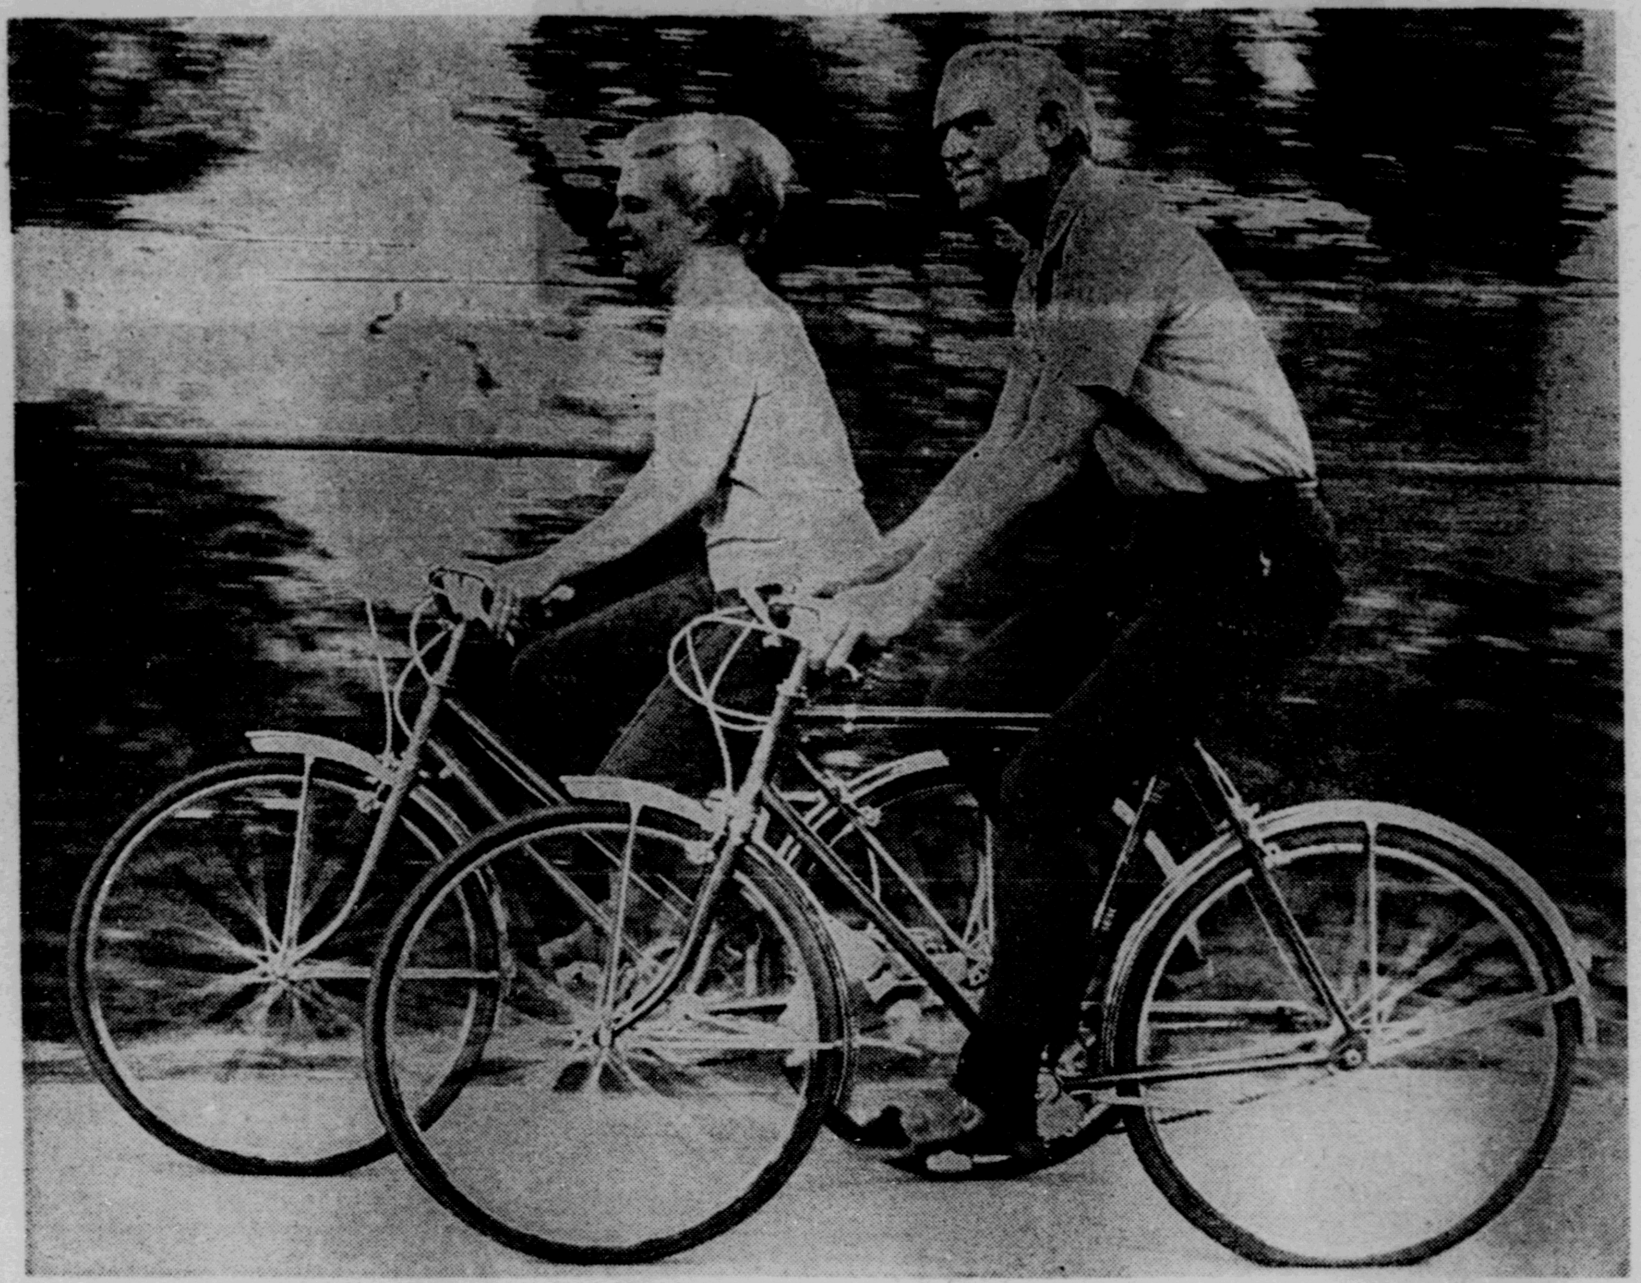
THEY DO agree about clothes. Wally dresses as casually as possible. He has worn the same suit on the television show for four years. The other (he has only two) is seldom worn. For variety he wears different neckties, choosing among the four he owns.

When Mr. and Mrs. Cox entertain at home the party is usually restricted to a half dozen guests. Any more than that, he feels, eliminates the possibility of good conversation.

For kicks Wally rides a motorcycle. Slowly. He has no plans to enter races with such speed burners as Steve McQueen.

FOR SEVERAL years Cox made his home in Connecticut, but now he is a hard and fast Californian.

"I'm happier than I have ever been," he says. "I have a sense of community, belonging, living in one place permanently."



WITH ALL the vigor and enthusiasm of teen-agers, Howard and June Embury enjoy a spin on their bicycles. Mrs. Embury, whose appearance and spirit belie her nearly 60 years, has spent much of her life in the physical culture and health food fields. Her husband, formerly in construction, is new to the health food business since his wife opened San Rafael Health Foods in June of 1966. But now he is as much an enthusiast as she is. And he has left his former profession to join his wife in the full-time management of their thriving health food business. (Photo by Alfred M. Arn)

Good Health Is June Embury's Business

It's Also The Secret Of Her Youthful Looks Approaching 60

One's first impression of blonde, statuesque June Embury, San Rafael business woman and Kentfield housewife, is that she is probably in her late 40s, but looks somewhat younger because she has taken good care of herself.

A skin clear and free of wrinkles, eyes that sparkle, a vitality that a teen-ager would envy all contribute to the impression of youth.

Then as she tells you of her eventful life, she happens to mention that in 1934, when she was chosen "National Health Girl" of the USA, she was 23 years old.

WHICH MEANS that June Embury is not far short of the observance of her 60th birthday, all appearances to the contrary.

A handsome, dynamic woman, she stands behind the counter as the best single advertisement for the wares dispensed by her small but bustling business, San Rafael Health Foods at 1132 Fourth Street in downtown San Rafael.

But before her involvement in the booming health food field and before her coming to Marin, June Embury had lived an eventful, not always easy past.

SHE WAS BORN in Antwerp, Belgium, as June van Couwenberghe and was a tot of but 3 when the Germans invaded her native country in 1914.

Her earliest memories are of four years spent under the harsh, sometimes terrifying, conditions of German occupation.

Her father, a Belgian soldier, was wounded early in the war. He escaped capture as Belgium fell before the invaders only by fleeing, first to Holland, then to England, and eventually on to America where he made his home in New Jersey and found work on a tugboat.

Van Couwenberghe had been forced to leave his wife and daughter behind in Antwerp.

SMALL CHILD though she was, June recalls vividly today the hours spent in the cellar with her mother sitting out the Allied bombing attacks upon the German-occupied city and area.

She remembers, too, the two arrests of her mother by the Germans -- and her subsequent release. The first was for mocking the Germans' military goose-step in public, the second for appearing attired in the Belgian national colors at a German army parade.

She has painful memories as well of the worsening food system that was not relieved until final Allied victory.

"BY THE WAR'S end the ration had been reduced to black bread and buttermilk, and only when these were available," she says. "No doubt my later preoccupation with nutrition had its roots in those times."

In 1919 Van Couwenberghe was able to bring his wife and daughter to the United States where he had started a new life. June grew up in New Jersey, and became an ardent physical culturist in her late teens.

In her early 20s she was a devoted follower of the internationally-known Bernarr McFadden, a pioneer figure in America in the vigorous exercise and good diet for sound health field. It was through her association with the MacFadden movement that she was named the country's "National Health Girl" in 1934.

SHORTLY thereafter June found herself selling health foods throughout a country that was then considerably less nutrition-conscious than it is today.

And eventually she settled in San Francisco and opened that city's first "juice bar," an establishment that squeezed fresh fruit and vegetable juices for the refreshment of the tired office workers of the downtown and financial districts.

So successful was this enterprise that she opened two more juice bars.

But with marriage and the arrival of two children, she retired from business to rear her family in the Kentfield home.

BY THE MID-1960s, her two sons had been graduated from the University of California at Berkeley and her first marriage had ended in divorce. She was now married to Howard Embury, a carpenter-foreman with Ralph E. Murphy & Sons in San Rafael. And with her boundless energy she was eager to get back into the business world, preferably into the health food field in which she had pioneered and which was now experiencing a surge of public interest.

She recalls now with much amusement how husband Howard belittled the idea. To him, the people who ate health foods were fanatics and faddists who lived on raw fruits and vegetables, preferably exotic, and expensive, plants from faraway.

"My rebuttal," she says, "was that many of the people interested in health foods were not fanatics at all, but sensibly concerned over the cost they were paying in lost nutrition for some of the convenient, easily-prepared processed foods of the supermarket."

SHE POINTED to the many articles then appearing in magazines and newspapers creating a growing consumer awareness of the problem.

It was agreed, then, that June Embury would open a small health foods store somewhere in Marin.

The hunt for a good location ended in the leasing of space at 1132 Fourth Street, and the opening, in June of 1966, of the San Rafael Health Foods.

June at first ran the store alone with husband Howard helping at night after the completion of his carpentry work.

TODAY SAN Rafael Health Foods employs six, the youngest of them hard put to match the energy of the proprietress. And the always busy premises were recently expanded to include the adjacent store to the west, thus doubling the display space.

June Embury says her philosophy is this:

"Really good health is a state of genuine well-being, not simply the absence of disease. And good nutrition is a very important factor in achieving really good health."

As for husband Howard, once the scoffer:

HE HAS LOST the 35 pounds of excess weight he carried four years ago.

And he has long since given up construction work to take over the full-time management of the store, "working harder than I ever did before, and enjoying it more."

He drinks a high protein cocktail four times a day to help him maintain that pace. And he has become, if such is possible, even more enthusiastic about health foods than is June Embury herself.

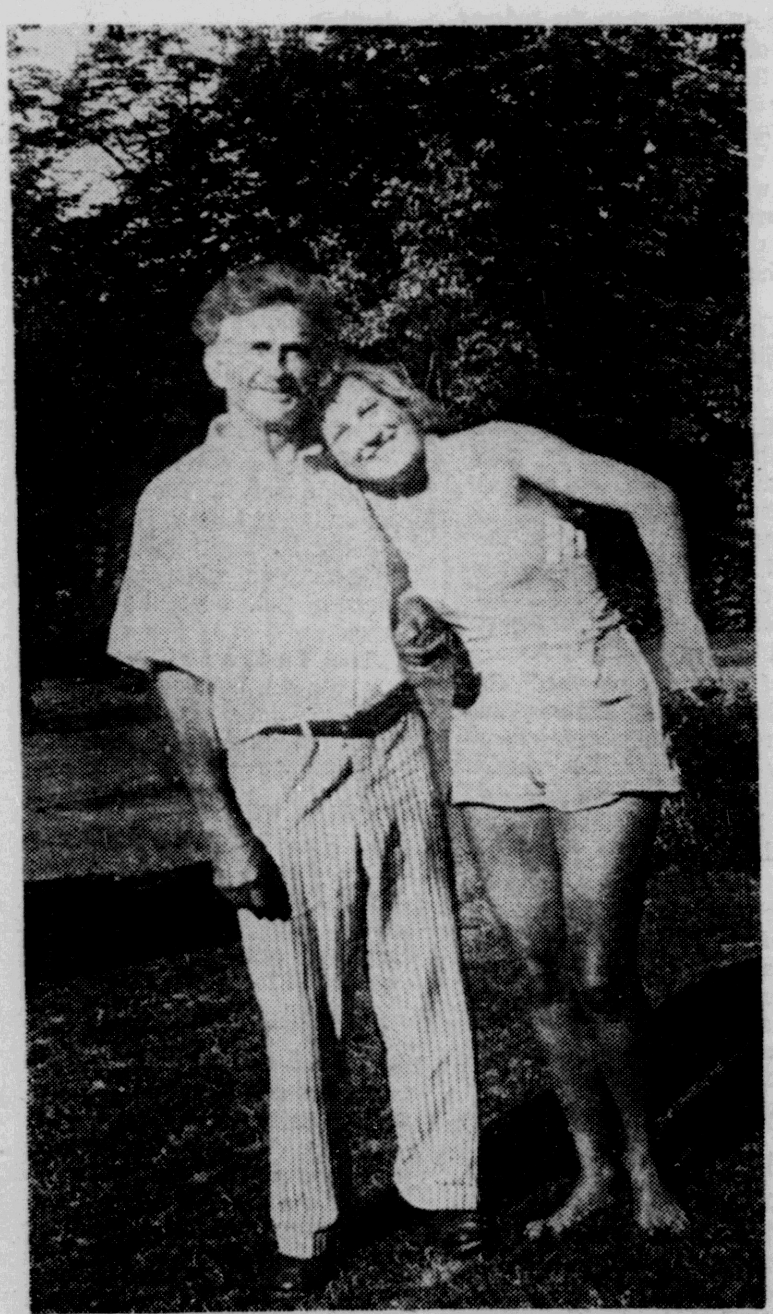
THE SCENE WAS Dansville, N.Y. where physical culturist Bernarr McFadden operated a health camp in the 1930s. That's June van Couwenberghe, the blonde in the center waving at the camera. Now June Embury of Marin, she was then teaching at the McFadden camp. McFadden himself is on her left, while on her right is Dr. Robert Jackson, another physical culture pioneer. Others are members of the camp staff.



THE YEAR WAS 1934 and June van Couwenberghe, now June Embury, had been named the country's National Health Girl. She received the affectionate congratulations of her mentor, famed physical culturist Bernarr McFadden.

A Proud And Peaceful People

Coast Miwoks Thrived In An Area Of Abundance

(Editor's Note: This is another in the series of articles on early Marin events and people completed by the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian, prior to her death.)

By FLORENCE DONNELLY

It is an irony of history that most Marinites know far more about the Sioux, the Comanche, the Apache, the Iroquois and other tribes that inhabited other regions than they know about the Indians that once lived in our own area.

Yet, Marin County has its Indian history, as indicated by such surviving anglicized place names as Olema (Olema-loke), Bolinas (Baulines) and Tomales (Tomalles).

And these Marin Indians were a more impressive people than is sometimes recognized, even though they were generally unwarlike.

A. L. KROEBER, one of the outstanding authorities on California Indians, divides the Miwoks into two categories, the Coast Miwoks and the Lake Miwoks. It was the Coast Miwoks who inhabited Marin. And these he broke down further into various tribes that for the most part were identified by the names of their villages or, as the Spanish called them, their rancherias.

From village to village the Miwok "tongue" differed, each having its own dialect.

Each village, too, had its own chief who presided at the tribal ceremonies, settled disputes, designated hunting grounds, etc.

ABOUT THE Miwoks has grown up the myth of a poor people of little culture. Archaeological finds along Marin's bays and streams, however, along with historical records have forced a modification of that thinking.

For instance, it was not so much an absence of initiative that caused the Coast Miwoks to avoid confrontations with other tribes. Blessed with abundant food, they had little reason to battle over disputed hunting grounds.

They had other assets, too, that Indians living inland lacked —shells and salt that were useful in barter. And dark volcanic obsidian rock that could be chipped into sharp edges for arrow and spear heads and knife blades.

THESE INDIANS had their own ingenious method for obtaining salt with minimum effort.

Winter storms drove the waters of San Pablo and San Francisco bays over the tidelands and far inland. As they receded, they left behind salt water pools. Into these ponds the Indians drove sticks. And when the summer sun dried the pools, the Indian women pulled up the sticks and knocked the salt clods clinging to them into their baskets.

There was not only ample salt for their own needs, but a surplus for trading with other salt-hungry tribes.

BASKET WEAVING was a useful art of these Indian women, and on hand were such materials as tules and milkweed.

The squaw pounded the tule or weed stems until she had strong fibers that she could twist into a cord. Frames for her baskets were fashioned from the pliable twigs of hazel bushes. The strands were soaked for softening, and then pulled in and out of the openings of the twig frame.

These baskets were woven so tightly they could hold water without leaking, and they were made in many shapes and sizes to serve various purposes. Bits of shell or tufts of quail or blackbird feathers were sometimes used for decoration.

STREAMS OF fresh water fed by springs high in the hills and miles of shoreline were still other Miwok assets. They could dig clams and take mussels and abalone.

Villages were often located along fresh water streams and stake fences or weirs were built to trap trout and other fish.

The men could hunt in hills and valleys where elk and deer were more than plentiful.

The crafty Indians, knowing the limited range of their bows and arrows, would don deer or elks heads and skins so they could creep up on their prey.

EVERY PART of the slain deer was used. The hide served many purposes, as covering for wickiups, as thongs, as clothing, etc. Antlers were carved into tools. And when the tribe had eaten its full of fresh meat, the remaining flesh was dried in the sun and turned into the "jerkey" from which hunters and runners could get their nourishment while on the move.

Rabbit drives were an easy means of obtaining meat.

The Indian men would form a large circle, then slowly come together. Trapped rabbits inside the circle were clubbed to death.

TO THE WOMEN fell such tasks as the harvesting of wild oats and seeds, and the toasting of the grain in wide flat baskets over hot coals.

This toasted grain would then be pounded with pestles in stone mortars for long hours. Seeds, too, were stone ground.

The oak tree, too, provided food for the Indians.

The men climbed its trunk and shook its branches so that acorns fell to the ground, to be picked up by women and children. The hard shells were removed, and the soft meats ground into a meal that was leached with boiling water to remove its bitter taste. The acorn dough was then cooked on hot rocks, and sometimes berries, salmon and honey were added to make this unleavened bread more tasty.

ACORNS WERE also cooked in salted water to form a soft, edible mush.

Large supplies of acorns were laid away for the winter in granaries made of willow branches or tules, set on poles and covered with bark or hides. Pitch was spread on the poles at ground level so that mice or squirrels trying to get at the acorns were caught in the pitch.

An Indian woman wanting acorns during the winter simply pulled apart the woven branches or tules at the bottom of the granary. When enough acorns had poured through the opening, she closed the hole with more twigs.

MARIN ALSO had many hazelnut bushes, and these provided another source of delicious food.

The Indians were skilled too at cooking the roots of many native plants. Manzanita berries were eaten. Still other plants were used for their medicinal value.

Fish, caught in the streams, were cleaned and dried, to be used later to provide a change of diet.

Although the Indians lacked the tools necessary to fell the redwoods and other big trees, they were able to supply their needs by picking up fallen trunks and branches in the woods and dragging them to their village.

BEES SUPPLIED honey that sometimes was added to the bread or gruel.

And while the Miwoks were not a seafaring people, they built rafts or balsas by binding tules together. The balsas would be poled into the quieter waters of the bays where the Indians would spear salmon and sea otters, using harpoons made of bone or antlers.

The village arrangement gave the Miwok both companionship and protection. Each family, however, had its own wickiup.

TO BUILD IT, a circle about 10 feet in diameter was marked on the ground. Then, in the circle, a pit two feet deep was dug. Saplings, usually willows, were brought in by the Indian man and trimmed to make poles 10 feet long. These poles were stuck in the ground around the pit and the tops tied together with thongs. Branches of trees were woven in and out of the poles.

To make the wickiup more weather-resistant, mats of tules were fastened to the outside. Rain slid off the mats as if they were shingles.

Dirt from the pit was pounded around the shelter. Two holes were left open, one as a ground level entrance, the other at the top so that smoke could exit. A mat was hung over the entrance to keep out wind and rain.

IN MOST villages there was a larger wickiup where the tribe could gather to talk, sing and dance.

The Miwoks might have been primitives — people who still started their fires by friction. But they also knew and practiced the good life — ample food and water, warm fires, adequate shelter, personal cleanliness, etc.

They had learned, too, the value of relaxation and companionship. Long before white Americans imported the sauna bath from Scandinavia, the Miwoks had their own version of it.

EACH VILLAGE has its temenscale (as the Spanish were to call it) or sweat-house.

In his "Seventy-Five Years in California," William Heath Davis told of viewing their sweathouse rituals as it had been going on generations before him:

"I have often seen the Indians north of the Bay of San Francisco at their temenscales. A large cavity was made in the ground six or eight feet deep, somewhat like a cellar and tightly covered over with brush, with a little aperture for the smoke to pass out. In the cavity they made a very hot fire, and a number of them, men, women and children, nearly bare of clothing, went in and subjected themselves to the heating process . . .

"THEY REMAINED there for a half-hour to an hour, or entirely heated through, so that the perspiration ran off them in streams. In that condition, they rushed out, plunged into a pool in a creek nearby, cooled off and washed, after which they returned to their habitations.

"I frequently watched this steaming of the Indians and wondered that they were not instantly killed by the sudden transition from hot to cold, but never knew one of them to be injured."

The Indian women and girls wore skirts made of tules or a strip of soft bark. Sometimes an especially fine skirt was made of deerskin, after the hair had been scraped away and the hide softened by continuous rubbing. The skirt was open at the sides so that it was easy for the wearer to climb hills or to squat upon the ground.

IN WARM weather the skirt was all the Indian woman wore. But if it were cold, she would also don a cape of deerskin or of some other hide, perhaps that of rabbit or squirrel, pulled together by thongs.

The Indian men were nearly-nude, except for a deerskin around their waists tied with a strip of leather. In rain or cold they added capes like those of their women. Generally their feet were bare, but when they were hunting or beginning a long journey, they would put on moccasins, sandals made of soft leather.

Although bears roamed the Marin hills then, the Indians did not hunt them. There were easier sources of furs, hides and meat that could be taken without risk to lives.

THE INDIAN babies were carried in baskets strapped to their mother's back. They and older children wore no clothing in warm weather. And in winter they stayed inside the wickiup. There were cradles of deerskin on a basket frame.

These people were sturdy, of medium height. The men were muscular and lithe. The women, slender in youth, gained weight in later years when the younger women took over the heavier work.

The Indians were dark-skinned, bushy-browed, with deep-set dark eyes and black hair. The cheek bones were high and prominent.

THEY WERE for the most part friendly people, although there was at least one village along Tomales Bay whose occupants were more aggressive, resisting bitterly other Indians who came to dig the clams.

Kroeber has written of the people of this place and time:

"Marin and its environs are extraordinarily diversified in coast line, nature of shore, topography, exposure, temperature and vegetation, and much of the district must have been extraordinarily well suited for native occupation.

"SETTLEMENTS clustered mostly about the estuaries or their vicinity . . One stretched along the sunny side of Tomales Bay. Bolinas Bay probably had at least one village. Sausalito

LAST OF a proud people was Jose Caleistro, a Miwok chief and said to be the last surviving full-blooded Marin Indian. He lived in Nicasio and struggled to keep together the remnants of his tribe who had once lived in peace and plenty in Marin, but who found themselves unable to adjust to what had become a white man's world. The portrait hangs in the Marin Historical Society Museum at Boyd Park, San Rafael, where it was copied by Independent-Journal photographer Bob Hax.

The Story Of Marin's Miwok Indians—

and the shores of Richardson Bay were inviting. Beyond, San Rafael and the adjacent shore were attractive.

"In the region of Ignacio and Novato, hills and bay sloughs are still in proximity and there are records of several settlements as well as an abundance of shell deposits.

"On San Antonio Creek were Olompali and its outposts . . .It was evidently more convenient to live in the open, close to the supply of mussels, clams, fish and waterfowl, and occasionally visit the hills to hunt, than to live in the shade inland and travel to the shore. Mollusks were, perhaps, a more dependable, if less prized, diet than venison."

THIS THEN was the quite peaceful and relatively comfortable way of life that the first white men visiting Marin's shores discovered.

Kroeber has quoted from "the principal narrative that has survived (Sir Francis) Drake's 1579 landing in Marin while on his circumnavigation of the globe voyage" which he describes as "surprisingly detailed in its account of the inhabitants of Nova Albion . . ."

The Drake party, says Kroeber, found the substantial wickiups described earlier, the well-made baskets, the shells

WHITE MEN among the early arrivals in Marin found the Coast Miwoks looking very much like these artist's sketches of California Indians of 1764. At top, the men were nearly nude, except for a deerskin worn around their waists and tied with a strip of leather. And at right, the women, who wore only tule, bark or deerskin skirts in warm weather, added capes of deer or other animal hides for cooler temperatures.

THE PLEA

Nothing in years
    Has touched me as much
As the Doctor's plea
    For Leukemia research;
My face is wet—
    It is flooded with tears;
I lived thru this heartache
    For several years
And finally faced
    My greatest loss.
Not enough research
    May have been the cause;
Enclosed is my check
    With a prayer for sure
That endless effort
    Will find a cure

SAN RAFAEL   MRS. MANNY CERF

ON THE BAY

Geese, flying high, strung across the sky,
Dark beads, against the faded blue
Of a tattered Hippie shirt.
Sail, all becalmed, waiting patiently,
For a breeze . . . a hundred brides,
Seeking a bridegroom who seems to desert.

The city, a monstrous monopoly game,
Cut from cardboard, awaiting unseen players
Behind a curtain of fog.
The gulls, in a doleful chorus,
Screaming relentlessly, always off key—
Reality's unpleasant epilogue.

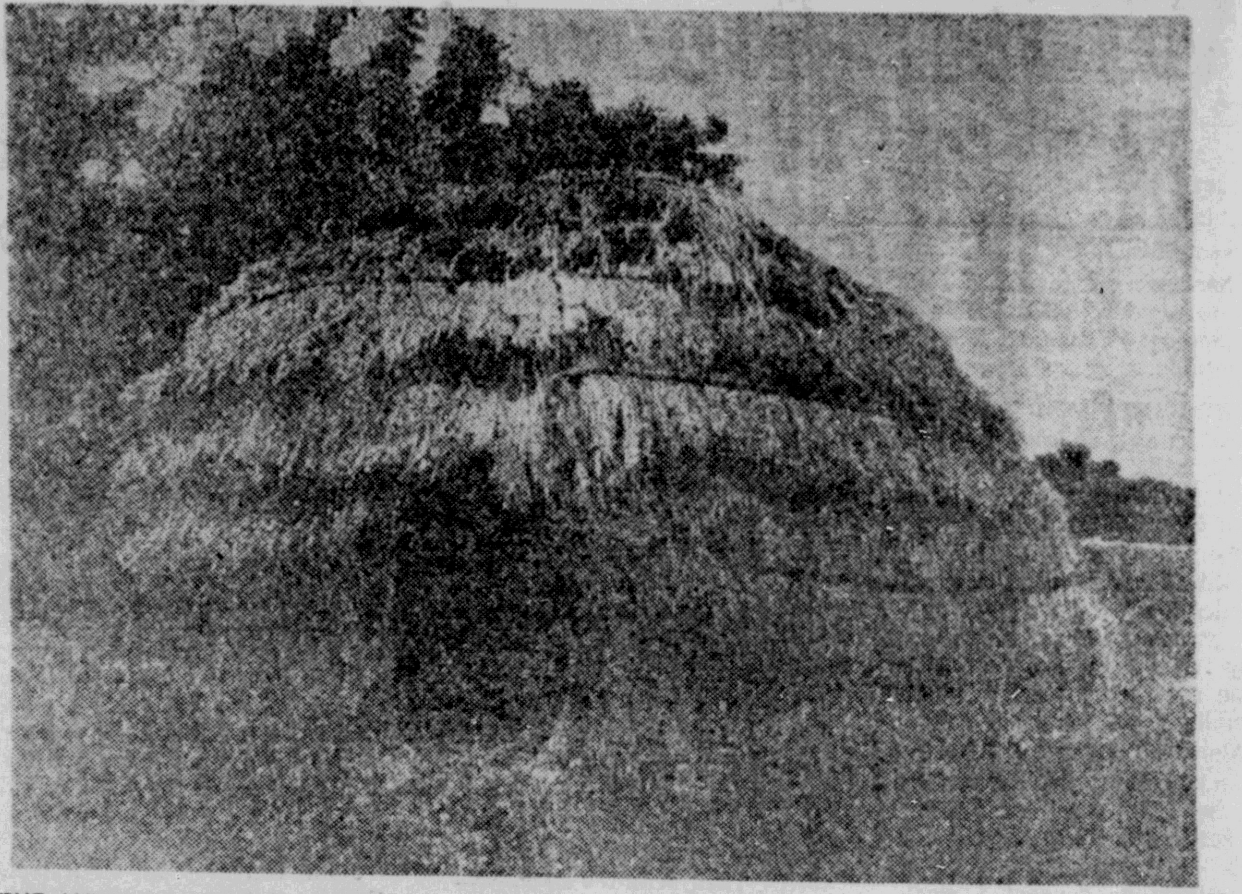
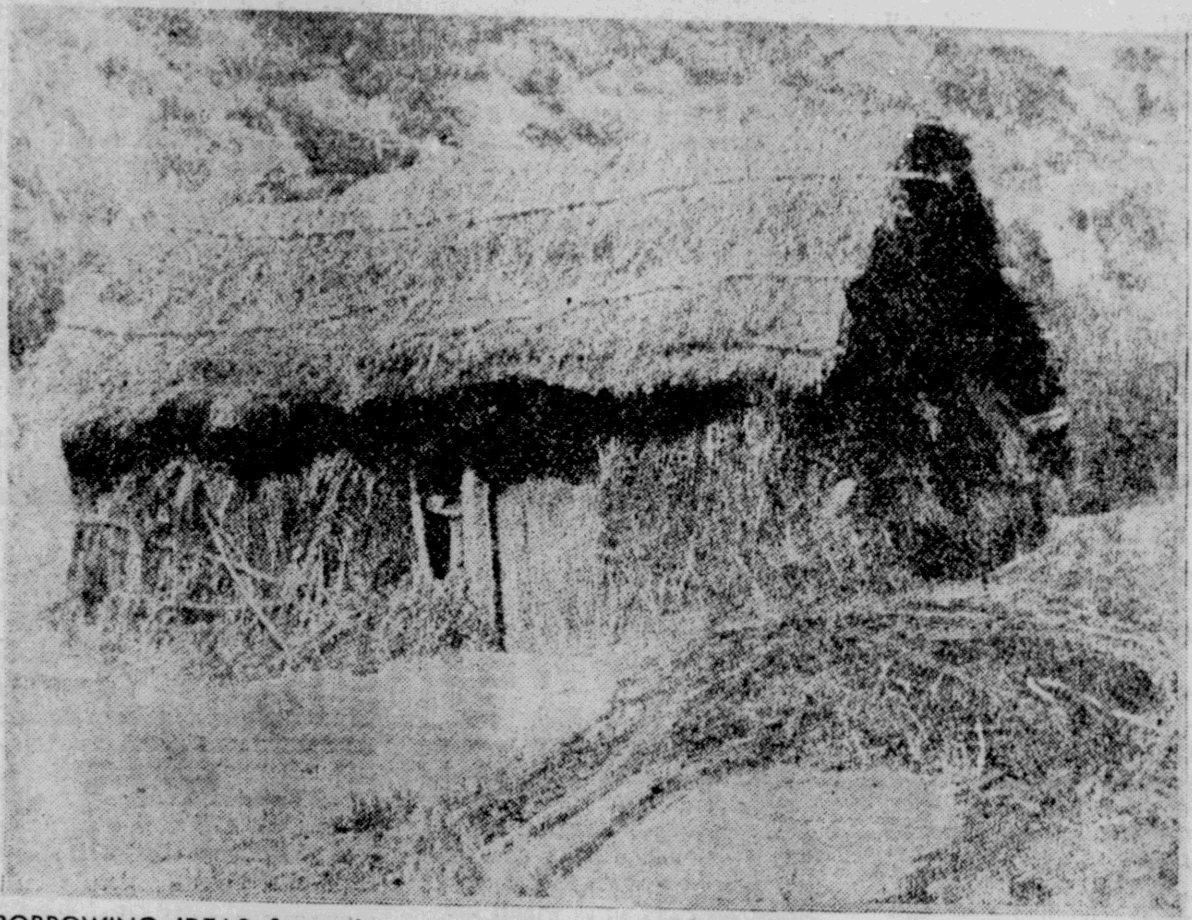
The Indians Of Marin—

Miwoks Led A Good Life Before White Man Came



THE MIWOK INDIANS were living in these "bee-hive" shape huts when the first white men reached Marin County. Constructed of poles and tules or bulrushes, the dwellings were built around a firepit with a hole at the top to allow the smoke to escape.



BORROWING IDEAS from the white builders, but continuing to use the native materials easily available to them, the Indians began to construct more substantial homes that looked like the structure shown in this faded picture.

that were used as money and as ornaments (mistaken for bone by the English).

FROM THESE visitors Kroeber borrowed this description of the Indian bows and arrows:

"Their bows and arrows which are their only weapons and almost all the wealth, they use skillfully, yet without much execution, they being fitter for children than for men (so the small bows would have seemed when compared with the powerful weapons of the English archers).

"Yet they (the Indians) are usually so strong that one of them could easily carry that a mile together without pain which two or three Englishmen could hardly bear. They run very swiftly and long, and seldom go any other pace; if they see a fish so near shore as to reach the place without swimming, they seldom miss it.

"DIVING FOR fish in the ocean has not been reported for any Californians, but several tribes are said to have taken salmon by hand in pools of considerable depth."

In analyzing the Drake report, Kroeber says: "Only the canoe in which one man put out to meet the ship and in which others subsequently appear to have paddled, when the English boat 'could row no way out but they would follow them,' presents a discrepancy. There is no authentic record of true canoes on the whole coast from Cape Mendocino to the vicinity of San Luis Obispo.

"Either custom has changed since Drake's day, or his 'canoe' was a loose term for the tule balsa which is often boatshaped, with raised sides, especially when intended for navigation.

"THERE IS NO doubt that, like Cabrillo . . .Drake was received with marked kindness. The simplest explanation is that the Indians regarded the whites as returned dead. Such a belief would account for their repeated wailing and self-laceration, as well as the burned sacrifice of feathers."

"Evidence on the final test — speech — is too scant to be conclusive, but it is at least favorable to the opinion that Drake's friends must have been Coast Miwoks. The herb, 'tobah,' which was presented in little baskets, is, of course, tobacco. And the root called 'patah' from which they made bread or ate it either baked or raw, refers to the Broadieaea and other lily bulbs consumed in quantities by all Californians. The word, however, stands for potato."

THE NEXT significant report of the Marin Indians came as the result of the 1595 visit to California's shores by the Portuguese, Sebastian Rodriguez Cermeno.

Cermeno had been given permission by Luis de Velasco, viceroy of New Spain (Mexico), to pilot a ship to the Philippines on a voyage of discovery, particularly to pinpoint ports where ships on future voyages might land to rest their crews and replenish food supplies. Cermeno was also authorized to carry freight in order to earn money from the venture.

He sailed from Acapulco on the San Pedro and reached the Philippines safely. There, he transferred to the San Agustin, and with a crew of 70 men and 130 tons of cargo on board, left Cavite July 5, 1595, on the return trip.

OFF THE California coast, the San Agustin was hard hit by a storm that ripped off part of her deck.

Despite the objections of his crew, Cermeno brought the ship into Drake's Bay on Nov. 6, 1595.

Robert Fleming Heizer, writing for the California Historical Society Quarterly of December, 1941, quoted from Cermeno's log:

"Many Indians appeared on the beach and one of them came out to the ship in a tule balsa which he propelled with a paddle at each end. He remained beside the ship for some time talking in his language. Some cotton cloth, silk and a red cap were given to him.

"EARLY THE next morning four men, each rowing a tule balsa, came out to the ship and remained along side talking. They were given gifts of cloth after which they went ashore."

Cermeno then went ashore with 22 of his men in a ship's boat, landing on the beach near some Indian habitations.

He reported: "The people were well built, robust and inclined to fatness. The men were entirely naked, but the women wore grass or skin skirts. The hair was worn long, and body painting on the breast and arms was observed."

Cermeno took formal possession of the land in the name of the King of Spain. Then he and his men, in military formation, marched to the Indian village "about a harquebus-shot" from the shore.

THE INDIANS, about 50 in number and all adults, proved peaceful and gave their visitors some small seeds. Such seeds, crabs, wild birds and elk were found to be the dietary staples of the Indians.

The Cermeno party then proceeded inland for less than two miles where they met a band of Indian men, who upon seeing the newcomers, formed a circle and "uttered loud howls." A leader, carrying a tall banner of black feathers, approached the exploring party. Friendly Indians from the coastal village who had accompanied the white men talked to the new arrivals — "whereupon the latter laid down their bows and approached in a humble manner as if terrorized."

The native leader presented Cermeno with the black feather banner while other Indians handed over their bows to the Spaniards.

THE REPORT speaks of black and red paint on the faces of the Indians.

And Caroline O'Hara in her manuscript, "Indians of Marin County," giving as her sources Hubert Howe Bancroft's "Native Races of the Pacific Coast" and Bulletin 30, Bureau of American Ethnology, Washington, D. C., tells how the Indians, "small and so dark as to be almost black," were fond of painting their faces "in triangles and lines of vermillion."

The dyes, she said, were obtained by bartering with friendly tribes that lived near the New Almaden cinnabar mine.

CERMENO PUT into use a launch from the San Agustin that had been obtained in the Philippines, and several expeditions were made inland to obtain acorns and hazelnuts. They visited several additional Indian villages.

Disaster struck the Europeans when a heavy gale drove the San Agustin aground, wrecking the ship. Several men were lost. And there was the first trouble with the Indian villagers when some of the natives attempted to carry off wood from the damaged ship.

Dr. Heizer and others from the University of California discovered porcelain fragments while excavating on the Point Reyes Peninsula in 1940 that were believed to have been part of the San Agustin's cargo. Another expedition in 1941 discovered additional fragments.

CERMENO AND his crew suffered hunger and danger before, on Dec. 8, they pushed off from the Marin shore in the small Philippine launch. Seven weeks later, they reached port in Mexico.

Early white visitors were interested in the leisurely life enjoyed by the Coast Miwoks.

There were great feasts with the people enjoying dancing, singing and instrumental music. That music was discordant to the ears of the visitors, but it had a definite rhythm.

THERE WERE whistles made from hollow bones and flutes from hollow reeds. And rattles of dry, round sticks, split down the middle.

And dancing and music seemed a part of every occasion — at weddings, at funerals, to celebrate good hunting and fishing, to mark a plentiful acorn harvest, etc.

Once Proud Indians Could Not Cope With The New Civilization In Marin

There were contests of skill, too, to provide the Indians with amusement — running, hunting, swimming.

THE CHILDREN learned to swim almost as soon as they could walk. And they climbed trees to swing high in the air from branches.

The men played stick games in which they dropped handsful of sticks on a hide spread upon the ground and around which they squatted. And there is some evidence that the Indians gambled with shells as they played these games.

Each village had its shaman or medicine man, responsible for keeping away the evil spirits with his songs and dances. Sometimes he concocted medicinal brews, for the Indians knew the special properties of many of the herbs of the area.

WHEN A villager died, all Indians mourned, with the men silent, the women wailing. The body might be cremated or buried. If buried, the dead person's most treasured possessions — polished abalone shells, arrow heads, etc. — went into the earth with him.

Written records dealing with Marin Indians from 1595 to 1776 are lacking.

Honoria Twomey in her "History of Sonoma County" gives the date July, 1776, for the time when two young Spaniards sent by Juan de Ayala, commander of the San Carlos, visited an Indian village in Marin.

SUBSEQUENTLY, De Ayala sent out other expeditions, and his shipmaster, Capt. Fernando Quiros, sailed the ship's boat up the Petaluma River.

Two other Spaniards were sent from Lime Point into Marin and historians recorded their observances as they rode along the bay shore until they came to "a gurgling brook splashing along the well-wooded hillsides where they refreshed their jaded steeds and were themselves regaled after the weary ride in the summer sun."

They noted that their surroundings showed evidence of long use as a camp by an Indian tribe. And when they encountered those Indians, they were received with hospitality that they returned by teaching the natives the skills of adobe brick making and house building.

THESE WERE the Olumpalis, later changed to the Olompalis. And under the supervision of the visiting Spaniards, the Indians built for their chief an adobe house, really a simple structure of but one room, 16 by 24 feet. But it must have seemed a marvel to the Indians, accustomed only to their crude wickiups.

How long the Spaniards remained at Olompali is not known, but it was probably a visit of short duration.

However, a second adobe dwelling, this one a larger structure, 24 by 56 feet, was also built at right angles to the first. And it became the home of the tribe's chief.

WITH ONLY periodic visits from white men, the Indians of Marin continued to live very much as they had lived for centuries. Then, with the dedication of the Mission San Rafael Arcangel in 1817 as part of the Franciscan mission chain in California, a great change was wrought in the lives of the natives.

Some resisted the attempts to Christianize them, regarding the missionaries as invaders and remaining aloof from the mission activities. But others listened to the new teachers, gaining not only a new religion but also the rudiments of an education.

One such was Camilo Ynitia, who succeeded his father as chief of the Olompalis and who was respected and praised by white men as well as his fellow Indians.

YNITIA WAS granted two square leagues, the Olompali Rancho, on Oct. 22, 1843, by Manuel Micheltorena, the Mexican governor after Mexico had gained its independence and assumed the administration of California.

The late Steve Richardson, son of Marin pioneer Capt. William Richardson, described Camilo Ynitia as "a man of marked ability, clean-cut, capable, all-around. To the best of my knowledge, he was the only full-blooded Indian to whom the Mexican government ever made a large grant of land."

William Heath Davis wrote of the Olompali chief:

"I KNEW (HIM) as a fine, intelligent man. He often came to San Francisco to purchase goods from Nathan Spear, whose agent I was then. He owned 600 cattle, numerous horses and sheep, and was a quite noted breeder. He was punctual in meeting his obligations, and because of this and his affability and intelligence, he was highly esteemed by all of us.

"He could read and write and keep accounts, having been educated by the missionaries at Mission San Rafael Arcangel. He was, likewise, a wheat-raiser and sold his crops to the Russians (who had established a settlement at Fort Ross).

"At the death of Solano (who had been General Vallejo's contact with the tribes), Camilo directed the burial with all tribal honors. General Vallejo always treated Camilo and Solano with high consideration because it was through these men he controlled and conquered tribes of Indians without shedding blood. It was also with their assistance that he had command of all the laborers he needed for his vast improvements in Sonoma and Petaluma."

RECORDS AT Mission San Rafael Arcangel up to 1822 show 829 Indians baptized, 244 married, 183 dead and 830 surviving.

The death rate is not so high as might first appear, since the mission was established to provide care for neophytes from Mission Dolores who were already ailing and sometimes dying.

Juan Garcia, son of Rafael Garcia, grantee of a large Marin rancho, told how his father, then a corporal, was sent by Luis Antonio Arguello, commandant of the Presidio at San Francisco, to Marin on a goodwill mission.

"HE WAS SENT to San Rafael on a sort of raft that drifted up the bay with the tide and was able to effect a landing at what is known as McNear's Point today. When he went ashore he was greeted by friendly Indians, who to the number of about 500 were camped where the B. B. McNear home (Glenwood) is today."

Garcia said several tribes of Indians were then headquartered in Marin, with some of them living in the willows at the foot of San Rafael's B street.

"The tidewater in the days of the mission and for many years thereafter came up to E Street, and all the land east of B Street was a beautiful clam bed at low tide, where the Indians secured their supply of clams and mussels. The east end of the town, from B Street to the bay, was covered at high tide, and at the foot of B Street the Indians had their rancheria.

"DURING THE winter these Indians were garbed in elk skins. In fact, all the wigwams and all the interior furnishing of same were made from skins of elk . . .

"I remember as a boy when the missionaries would use the water from San Rafael Hill to irrigate the orchard. This water was run down through a ditch. It was a novel irrigation scheme, and worked beautifully. The missionaries were very skillful at different trades and never shirked work themselves.

"Sundays and holy days of obligation were great days at the mission. The Indians and their families would come from miles around and attend mass in the mission church. They would bring venison, clams and hides to the missionaries, and in return would take away provisions obtainable at the mission storehouse.

"THE NICASIO Tribe, who were once powerful and numbered by the thousands, were inclined to be war-like, and whenever they arrived in San Rafael the missionaries had all they could do to prevent quarreling . . .

"For weeks before Easter Sunday, the missionaries were occupied in instructing the Indian children for the sacrament of confirmation . . . Two days before Easter, the Indians began arriving in San Rafael until, on the great day, several thousand were camped here and in the valley, the squaws dressed in every color of the rainbow, and the man in pants of elk skins and wearing warpaint.

"In the lower end of town, every tree and shrub was used as a hitching post for the Indian ponies. The carcasses of two score elk were roasted and served to the Indians . . ."

GARCIA TOLD, too, how Fr. Juan Amoroso secured a number of musical string instruments from Spain and formed a seven-member orchestra of young Indians.

The older Garcia told his son, too, of the scenes in the evenings among the wigwam clusters.

"Here and there among the wigwams one would encounter the mothers with suckling babes at their breasts, while they worked with pestles crushing grain in the mortars. Here and there one would discern a squaw loaded down with a burden of wood. Or a young buck returning with elk, deer, rabbits and other prey from the forest. Or fishermen coming back with the produce of the rivers, bay and ocean.

"THE YOUNG squaws, the belles of the day, painted with all the colors of the rainbow and decked in gorgeous calicos and burdened with shell and bead ornaments, occupied places of advantage beneath the spreading oaks for which the valley was famous in early days.

"Bucks, young and old, squatted here and there, smoking their long pipes and awaiting the evening dinner call."

But such happy scenes ended with the Mexican government's decree secularizing the missions. The friars left Mission San Rafael Arcangel. And the Indians dispersed.

DON TIMOTEO Murphy, as agent for the Marin Indians, succeeded in obtaining for them the grant of 20 square leagues in the Nicasio Valley. But after his death, the claim was voided by the land commission.

The Indians had also been promised a third of the horses at the mission plus other livestock. But there is no record that this promise was kept.

The Indians who had lived at the Mission San Rafael Arcangel had learned to speak Spanish, the language of the Franciscans, and such useful trades as boat-building, blacksmithing, metal work and carpentry, as well as farming and stockraising. But few could find work in such fields.

INSTEAD, THE owners of the large ranchos now found themselves with a vast source of labor, for which they had to pay only a pittance.

Some of these ranchers treat-

WITH ALL the vigor and enthusiasm of teen-agers, Howard and June Embury enjoy a spin on their bicycles. Mrs. Embury, whose appearance and spirit belie her nearly 60 years, has spent much of her life in the physical culture and health food fields. Her husband, formerly in construction, is new to the health food business since his wife opened San Rafael Health Foods in June of 1966. But now he is as much an enthusiast as she is. And he has left his former profession to join his wife in the full-time management of their thriving health food business. (Photo by Alfred M. Arn)

Good Health Is June Embury's Business

It's Also The Secret Of Her Youthful Looks Approaching 60

One's first impression of blonde, statuesque June Embury, San Rafael business woman and Kentfield housewife, is that she is probably in her late 40s, but looks somewhat younger because she has taken good care of herself.

A skin clear and free of wrinkles, eyes that sparkle, a vitality that a teen-ager would envy all contribute to the impression of youth.

Then as she tells you of her eventful life, she happens to mention that in 1934, when she was chosen "National Health Girl" of the USA, she was 23 years old.

WHICH MEANS that June Embury is not far short of the observance of her 60th birthday, all appearances to the contrary.

A handsome, dynamic woman, she stands behind the counter as the best single advertisement for the wares dispensed by her small but bustling business, San Rafael Health Foods at 1132 Fourth Street in downtown San Rafael.

But before her involvement in the booming health food field and before her coming to Marin, June Embury had lived an eventful, not always easy past.

SHE WAS BORN in Antwerp, Belgium, as June van Couwenberghe and was a tot of but 3 when the Germans invaded her native country in 1914.

Her earliest memories are of four years spent under the harsh, sometimes terrifying, conditions of German occupation.

Her father, a Belgian soldier, was wounded early in the war. He escaped capture as Belgium fell before the invaders only by fleeing, first to Holland, then to England, and eventually on to America where he made his home in New Jersey and found work on a tugboat.

Van Couwenberghe had been forced to leave his wife and daughter behind in Antwerp.

SMALL CHILD though she was, June recalls vividly today the hours spent in the cellar with her mother sitting out the Allied bombing attacks upon the German-occupied city and area.

She remembers, too, the two arrests of her mother by the Germans -- and her subsequent release. The first was for mocking the Germans' military goose-step in public, the second for appearing attired in the Belgian national colors at a German army parade.

She has painful memories as well of the worsening food system that was not relieved until final Allied victory.

"BY THE WAR'S end the ration had been reduced to black bread and buttermilk, and only when these were available," she says. "No doubt my later preoccupation with nutrition had its roots in those times."

In 1919 Van Couwenberghe was able to bring his wife and daughter to the United States where he had started a new life. June grew up in New Jersey, and became an ardent physical culturist in her late teens.

In her early 20s she was a devoted follower of the internationally-known Bernarr McFadden, a pioneer figure in America in the vigorous exercise and good diet for sound health field. It was through her association with the MacFadden movement that she was named the country's "National Health Girl" in 1934.

SHORTLY thereafter June found herself selling health foods throughout a country that was then considerably less nutrition-conscious than it is today.

And eventually she settled in San Francisco and opened that city's first "juice bar," an establishment that squeezed fresh fruit and vegetable juices for the refreshment of the tired office workers of the downtown and financial districts.

So successful was this enterprise that she opened two more juice bars.

But with marriage and the arrival of two children, she retired from business to rear her family in the Kentfield home.

BY THE MID-1960s, her two sons had been graduated from the University of California at Berkeley and her first marriage had ended in divorce. She was now married to Howard Embury, a carpenter-foreman with Ralph E. Murphy & Sons in San Rafael. And with her boundless energy she was eager to get back into the business world, preferably into the health food field in which she had pioneered and which was now experiencing a surge of public interest.

She recalls now with much amusement how husband Howard belittled the idea. To him, the people who ate health foods were fanatics and faddists who lived on raw fruits and vegetables, preferably exotic, and expensive, plants from faraway.

"My rebuttal," she says, "was that many of the people interested in health foods were not fanatics at all, but sensibly concerned over the cost they were paying in lost nutrition for some of the convenient, easily-prepared processed foods of the supermarket."

SHE POINTED to the many articles then appearing in magazines and newspapers creating a growing consumer awareness of the problem.

It was agreed, then, that June Embury would open a small health foods store somewhere in Marin.

The hunt for a good location ended in the leasing of space at 1132 Fourth Street, and the opening, in June of 1966, of the San Rafael Health Foods.

June at first ran the store alone with husband Howard helping at night after the completion of his carpentry work.

TODAY SAN Rafael Health Foods employs six, the youngest of them hard put to match the energy of the proprietress. And the always busy premises were recently expanded to include the adjacent store to the west, thus doubling the display space.

June Embury says her philosophy is this:

"Really good health is a state of genuine well-being, not simply the absence of disease. And good nutrition is a very important factor in achieving really good health."

As for husband Howard, once the scoffer:

HE HAS LOST the 35 pounds of excess weight he carried four years ago.

And he has long since given up construction work to take over the full-time management of the store, "working harder than I ever did before, and enjoying it more."

He drinks a high protein cocktail four times a day to help him maintain that pace. And he has become, if such is possible, even more enthusiastic about health foods than is June Embury herself.

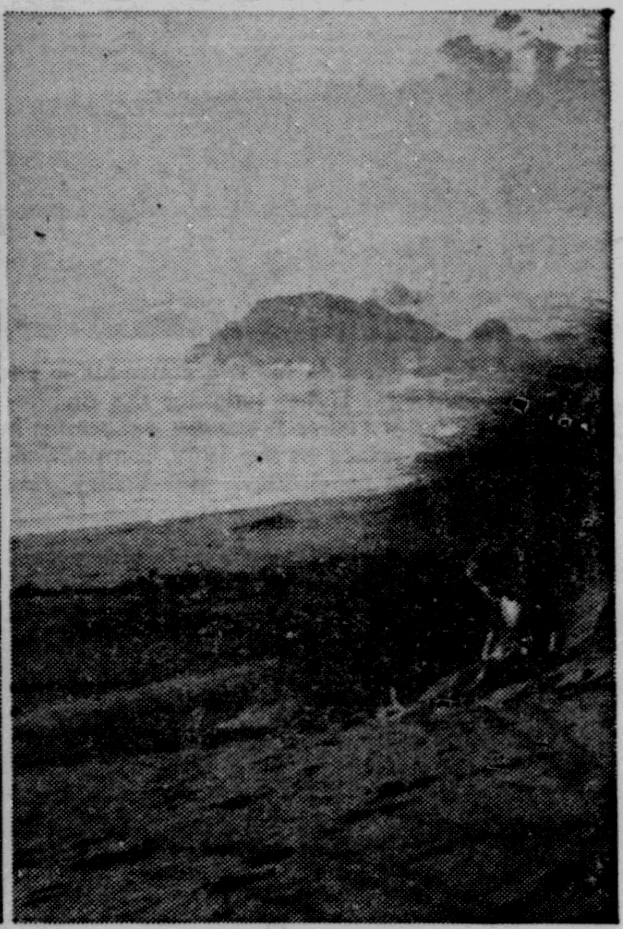
The Sea Ranch on the Sonoma Coast

gives you a choice of three different worlds.

The forest.

The meadow.

The beach.



Where would you like your country homesite? . . . At beachside, near the sound of the surf? . . . On a grassy meadow, with wildflowers beating a path to your door? . . . Or sheltered on a gentle slope in a forest of redwoods and pines?

The Sea Ranch gives you a choice of all three, all within one development only 2½ hours from San Francisco.

Just because you choose one type of site here, though, does not mean that you have to forego the pleasures of the others. Nearly half The Sea Ranch land—including beaches, headlands and much of the meadow—is reserved for the recreational use of all who live here. You have free access to these areas. Thus, you can saddle up for a ride in the woods, picnic on the beach, hike the meadows, anytime the spirit moves you.

Prices for homesites at The Sea Ranch begin at $7,500. To find out more about this spectacular country home colony on the Sonoma Coast, send for our free brochure and more information. Simply call (415) 391-4002 in San Francisco or mail the coupon below.

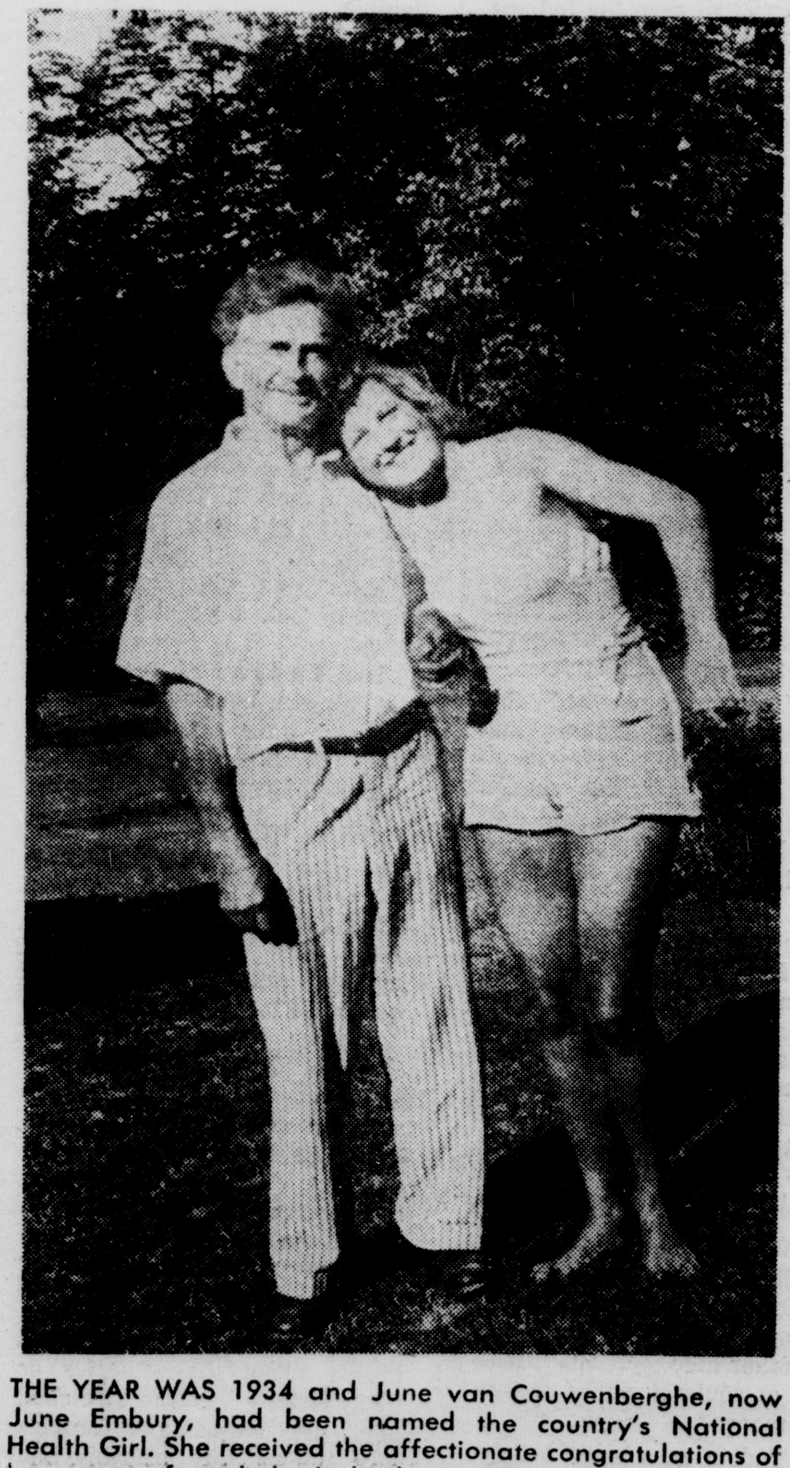
THE SCENE WAS Dansville, N.Y. where physical culturist Bernarr McFadden operated a health camp in the 1930s. That's June van Couwenberghe, the blonde in the center waving at the camera. Now June Embury of Marin, she was then teaching at the McFadden camp. McFadden himself is on her left, while on her right is Dr. Robert Jackson, another physical culture pioneer. Others are members of the camp staff.



THE YEAR WAS 1934 and June van Couwenberghe, now June Embury, had been named the country's National Health Girl. She received the affectionate congratulations of her mentor, famed physical culturist Bernarr McFadden.

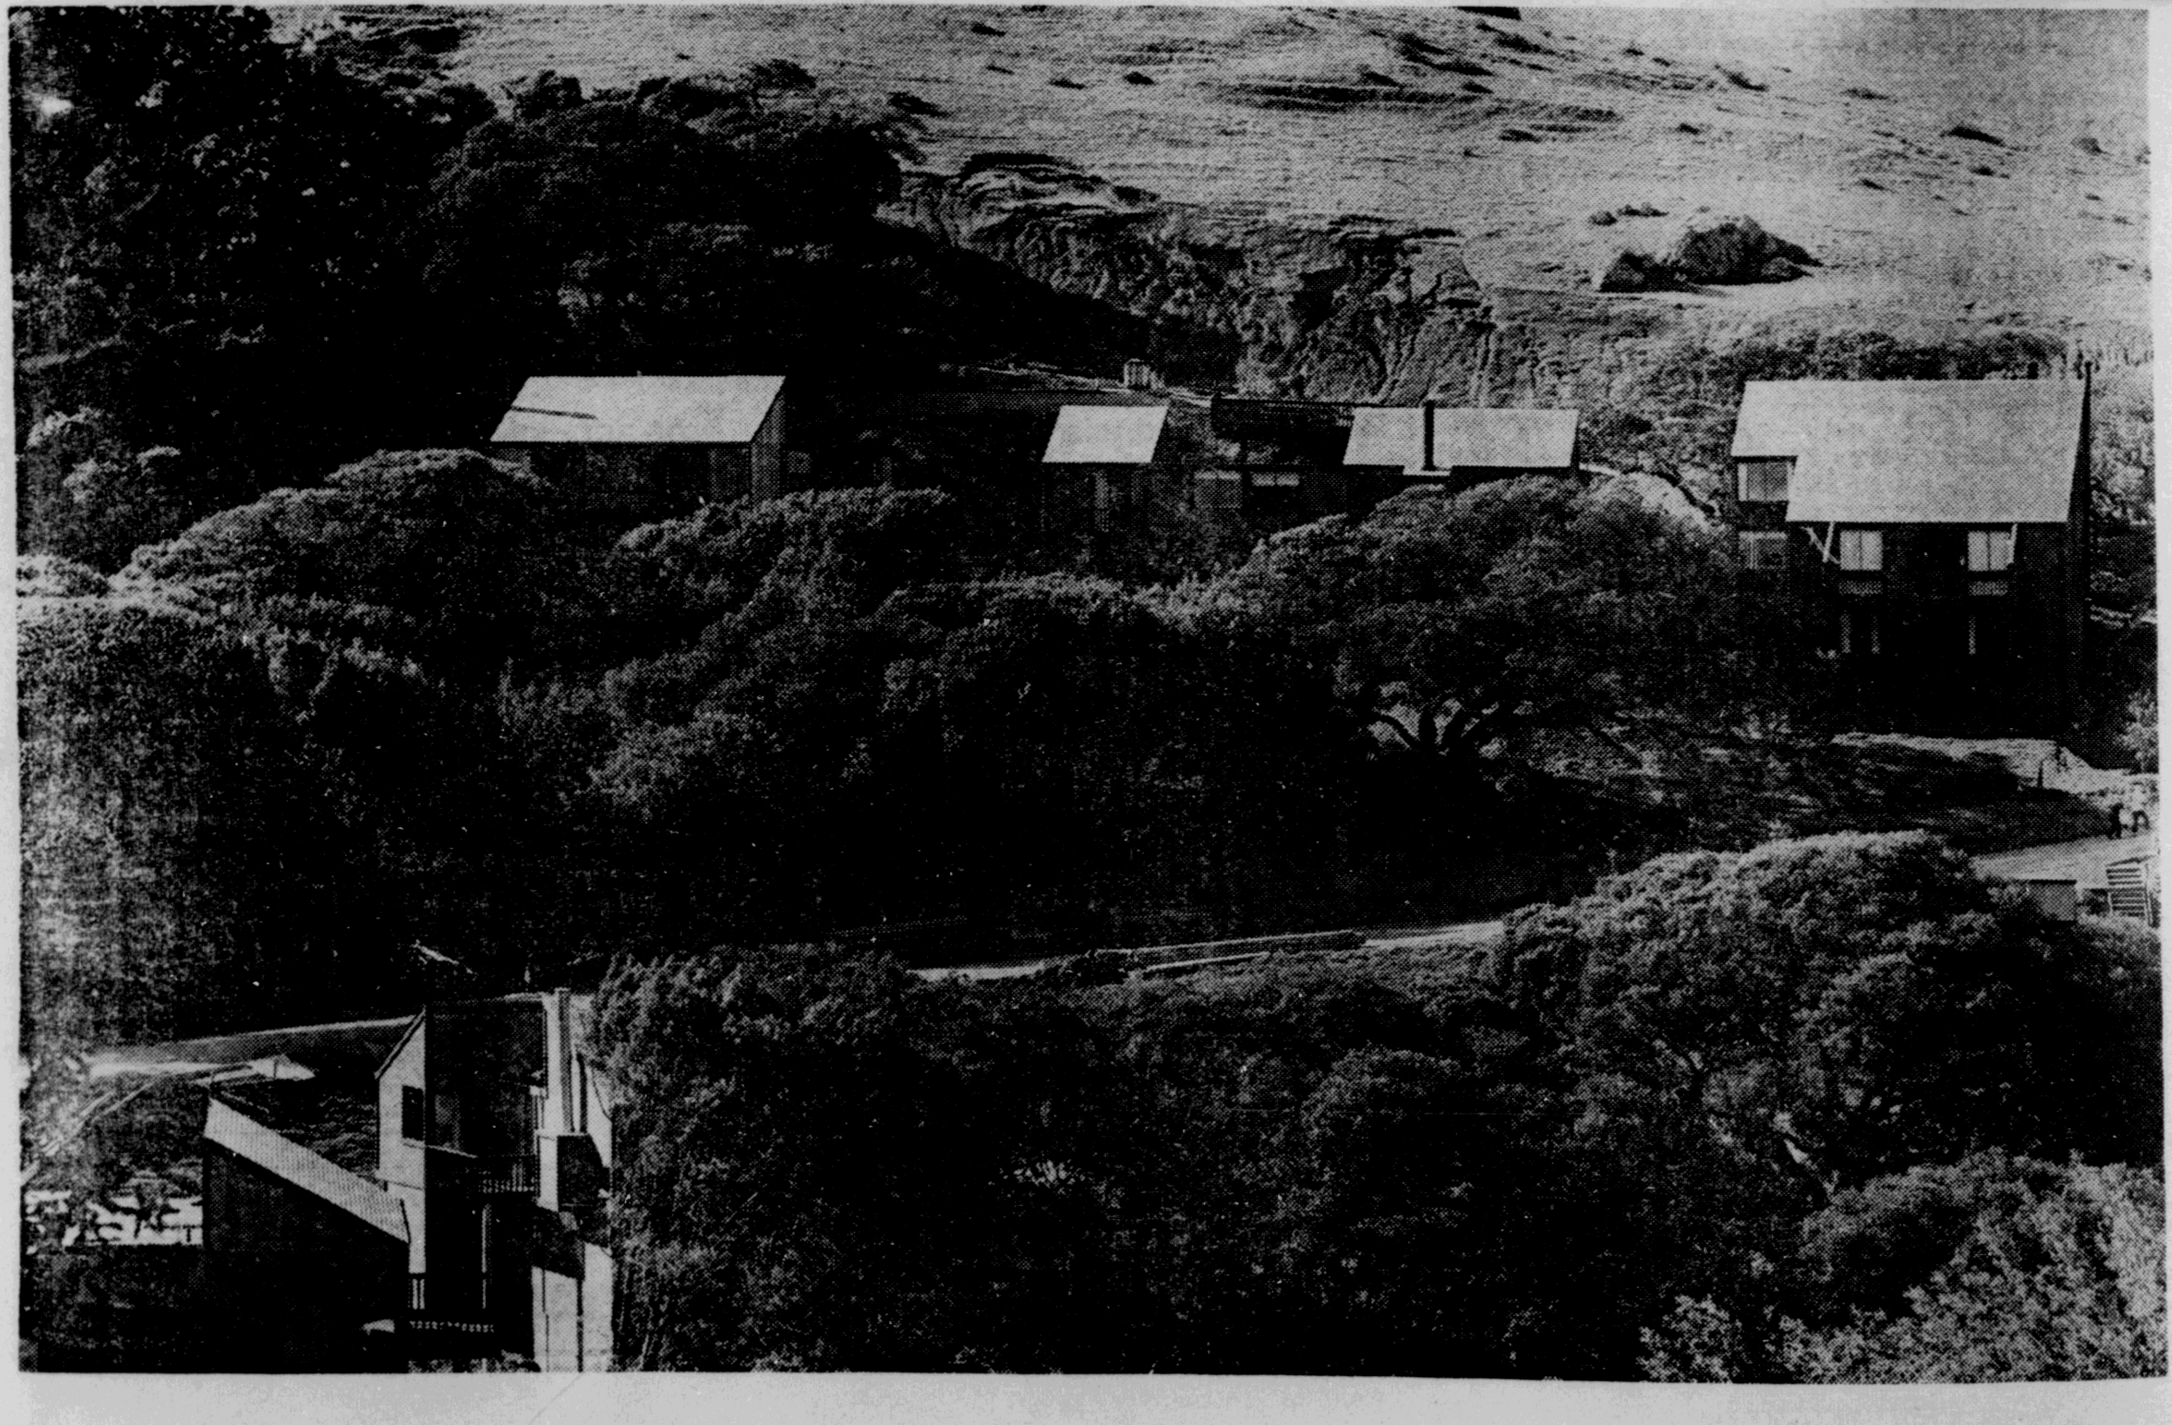
AFTER CAPTURING three awards for two consecutive years in the prestigious Homes for Better Living judging, the architectural and planning consultant firm of Fisher-Friedman Associates has bested its own record with four prizes in the 1969 competition. Included are a merit award for the MarinView, Mill Valley, house above built for Allan-Marin Co., a merit award for the Mariner Square apartment-recreation complex in Newport Beach constructed for the Irvine Co., and honorable mention for Ballena Bay townhouse-marina complex in Alameda and a custom-built residence in Alamo.



A Proud And Peaceful People

Coast Miwoks Thrived In An Area Of Abundance

(Editor's Note: This is another in the series of articles on early Marin events and people completed by the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian, prior to her death.)

By FLORENCE DONNELLY

It is an irony of history that most Marinites know far more about the Sioux, the Comanche, the Apache, the Iroquois and other tribes that inhabited other regions than they know about the Indians that once lived in our own area.

Yet, Marin County has its Indian history, as indicated by such surviving anglicized place names as Olema (Olema-loke), Bolinas (Baulines) and Tomales (Tomalles).

And these Marin Indians were a more impressive people than is sometimes recognized, even though they were generally unwarlike.

A. L. KROEBER, one of the outstanding authorities on California Indians, divides the Miwoks into two categories, the Coast Miwoks and the Lake Miwoks. It was the Coast Miwoks who inhabited Marin. And these he broke down further into various tribes that for the most part were identified by the names of their villages or, as the Spanish called them, their rancherias.

From village to village the Miwok "tongue" differed, each having its own dialect.

Each village, too, had its own chief who presided at the tribal ceremonies, settled disputes, designated hunting grounds, etc.

ABOUT THE Miwoks has grown up the myth of a poor people of little culture. Archaeological finds along Marin's bays and streams, however, along with historical records have forced a modification of that thinking.

For instance, it was not so much an absence of initiative that caused the Coast Miwoks to avoid confrontations with other tribes. Blessed with abundant food, they had little reason to battle over disputed hunting grounds.

They had other assets, too, that Indians living inland lacked —shells and salt that were useful in barter. And dark volcanic obsidian rock that could be chipped into sharp edges for arrow and spear heads and knife blades.

THESE INDIANS had their own ingenious method for obtaining salt with minimum effort.

Winter storms drove the waters of San Pablo and San Francisco bays over the tidelands and far inland. As they receded, they left behind salt water pools. Into these ponds the Indians drove sticks. And when the summer sun dried the pools, the Indian women pulled up the sticks and knocked the salt clods clinging to them into their baskets.

There was not only ample salt for their own needs, but a surplus for trading with other salt-hungry tribes.

BASKET WEAVING was a useful art of these Indian women, and on hand were such materials as tules and milkweed.

The squaw pounded the tule or weed stems until she had strong fibers that she could twist into a cord. Frames for her baskets were fashioned from the pliable twigs of hazel bushes. The strands were soaked for softening, and then pulled in and out of the openings of the twig frame.

These baskets were woven so tightly they could hold water without leaking, and they were made in many shapes and sizes to serve various purposes. Bits of shell or tufts of quail or blackbird feathers were sometimes used for decoration.

STREAMS OF fresh water fed by springs high in the hills and miles of shoreline were still other Miwok assets. They could dig clams and take mussels and abalone.

Villages were often located along fresh water streams and stake fences or weirs were built to trap trout and other fish.

The men could hunt in hills and valleys where elk and deer were more than plentiful.

The crafty Indians, knowing the limited range of their bows and arrows, would don deer or elks heads and skins so they could creep up on their prey.

EVERY PART of the slain deer was used. The hide served many purposes, as covering for wickiups, as thongs, as clothing, etc. Antlers were carved into tools. And when the tribe had eaten its full of fresh meat, the remaining flesh was dried in the sun and turned into the "jerkey" from which hunters and runners could get their nourishment while on the move.

Rabbit drives were an easy means of obtaining meat.

The Indian men would form a large circle, then slowly come together. Trapped rabbits inside the circle were clubbed to death.

TO THE WOMEN fell such tasks as the harvesting of wild oats and seeds, and the toasting of the grain in wide flat baskets over hot coals.

This toasted grain would then be pounded with pestles in stone mortars for long hours. Seeds, too, were stone ground.

The oak tree, too, provided food for the Indians.

The men climbed its trunk and shook its branches so that acorns fell to the ground, to be picked up by women and children. The hard shells were removed, and the soft meats ground into a meal that was leached with boiling water to remove its bitter taste. The acorn dough was then cooked on hot rocks, and sometimes berries, salmon and honey were added to make this unleavened bread more tasty.

ACORNS WERE also cooked in salted water to form a soft, edible mush.

Large supplies of acorns were laid away for the winter in granaries made of willow branches or tules, set on poles and covered with bark or hides. Pitch was spread on the poles at ground level so that mice or squirrels trying to get at the acorns were caught in the pitch.

An Indian woman wanting acorns during the winter simply pulled apart the woven branches or tules at the bottom of the granary. When enough acorns had poured through the opening, she closed the hole with more twigs.

MARIN ALSO had many hazelnut bushes, and these provided another source of delicious food.

The Indians were skilled too at cooking the roots of many native plants. Manzanita berries were eaten. Still other plants were used for their medicinal value.

Fish, caught in the streams, were cleaned and dried, to be used later to provide a change of diet.

Although the Indians lacked the tools necessary to fell the redwoods and other big trees, they were able to supply their needs by picking up fallen trunks and branches in the woods and dragging them to their village.

BEES SUPPLIED honey that sometimes was added to the bread or gruel.

And while the Miwoks were not a seafaring people, they built rafts or balsas by binding tules together. The balsas would be poled into the quieter waters of the bays where the Indians would spear salmon and sea otters, using harpoons made of bone or antlers.

The village arrangement gave the Miwok both companionship and protection. Each family, however, had its own wickiup.

TO BUILD IT, a circle about 10 feet in diameter was marked on the ground. Then, in the circle, a pit two feet deep was dug. Saplings, usually willows, were brought in by the Indian man and trimmed to make poles 10 feet long. These poles were stuck in the ground around the pit and the tops tied together with thongs. Branches of trees were woven in and out of the poles.

To make the wickiup more weather-resistant, mats of tules were fastened to the outside. Rain slid off the mats as if they were shingles.

Dirt from the pit was pounded around the shelter. Two holes were left open, one as a ground level entrance, the other at the top so that smoke could exit. A mat was hung over the entrance to keep out wind and rain.

IN MOST villages there was a larger wickiup where the tribe could gather to talk, sing and dance.

The Miwoks might have been primitives — people who still started their fires by friction. But they also knew and practiced the good life — ample food and water, warm fires, adequate shelter, personal cleanliness, etc.

They had learned, too, the value of relaxation and companionship. Long before white Americans imported the sauna bath from Scandinavia, the Miwoks had their own version of it.

EACH VILLAGE has its temenscale (as the Spanish were to call it) or sweat-house.

In his "Seventy-Five Years in California," William Heath Davis is told of viewing their sweat-house rituals as it had been going on generations before him:

"I have often seen the Indians north of the Bay of San Francisco at their temenscales. A large cavity was made in the ground six or eight feet deep, somewhat like a cellar and tightly covered over with brush, with a little aperture for the smoke to pass out. In the cavity they made a very hot fire, and a number of them, men, women and children, nearly bare of clothing, went in and subjected themselves to the heating process . . .

"THEY REMAINED there for a half-hour to an hour, or entirely heated through, so that the perspiration ran off them in streams. In that condition, they rushed out, plunged into a pool in a creek nearby, cooled off and washed, after which they returned to their habitations.

"I frequently watched this steaming of the Indians and wondered that they were not instantly killed by the sudden transition from hot to cold, but never knew one of them to be injured."

The Indian women and girls wore skirts made of tules or a strip of soft bark. Sometimes an especially fine skirt was made of deerskin, after the hair had been scraped away and the hide softened by continuous rubbing. The skirt was open at the sides so that it was easy for the wearer to climb hills or to squat upon the ground.

IN WARM weather the skirt was all the Indian woman wore. But if it were cold, she would also don a cape of deerskin or of some other hide, perhaps that of rabbit or squirrel, pulled together by thongs.

The Indian men were nearly-nude, except for a deerskin around their waists tied with a strip of leather. In rain or cold they added capes like those of their women. Generally their feet were bare, but when they were hunting or beginning a long journey, they would put on moccasins, sandals made of soft leather.

Although bears roamed the Marin hills then, the Indians did not hunt them. There were easier sources of furs, hides and meat that could be taken without risk to lives.

THE INDIAN babies were carried in baskets strapped to their mother's back. They and older children wore no clothing in warm weather. And in winter they stayed inside the wickiup. There were cradles of deerskin on a basket frame.

These people were sturdy, of medium height. The men were muscular and lithe. The women, slender in youth, gained weight in later years when the younger women took over the heavier work.

The Indians were dark-skinned, bushy-browed, with deep-set dark eyes and black hair. The cheek bones were high and prominent.

THEY WERE for the most part friendly people, although there was at least one village along Tomales Bay whose occupants were more aggressive, resisting bitterly other Indians who came to dig the clams.

Kroeber has written of the people of this place and time:

"Marin and its environs are extraordinarily diversified in coast line, nature of shore, topography, exposure, temperature and vegetation, and much of the district must have been extraordinarily well suited for native occupation.

"SETTLEMENTS clustered mostly about the estuaries or their vicinity . . One stretched along the sunny side of Tomales Bay. Bolinas Bay probably had at least one village. Sausalito

LAST OF a proud people was Jose Caleistro, a Miwok chief and said to be the last surviving full-blooded Marin Indian. He lived in Nicasio and struggled to keep together the remnants of his tribe who had once lived in peace and plenty in Marin, but who found themselves unable to adjust to what had become a white man's world. The portrait hangs in the Marin Historical Society Museum at Boyd Park, San Rafael, where it was copied by Independent-Journal photographer Bob Hax.

and the shores of Richardson Bay were inviting. Beyond, San Rafael and the adjacent shore were attractive.

"In the region of Ignacio and Novato, hills and bay sloughs are still in proximity and there are records of several settlements as well as an abundance of shell deposits.

"On San Antonio Creek were Olompali and its outposts . . .It was evidently more convenient to live in the open, close to the supply of mussels, clams, fish and waterfowl, and occasionally visit the hills to hunt, than to live in the shade inland and travel to the shore. Mollusks were, perhaps, a more dependable, if less prized, diet than venison."

THIS THEN was the quite peaceful and relatively comfortable way of life that the first white men visiting Marin's shores discovered.

Kroeber has quoted from "the principal narrative that has survived (Sir Francis) Drake's 1579 landing in Marin while on his circumnavigation of the globe voyage" which he describes as "surprisingly detailed in its account of the inhabitants of Nova Albion . . ."

The Drake party, says Kroeber, found the substantial wickiups described earlier, the well-made baskets, the shells

Home Of Bristlecones

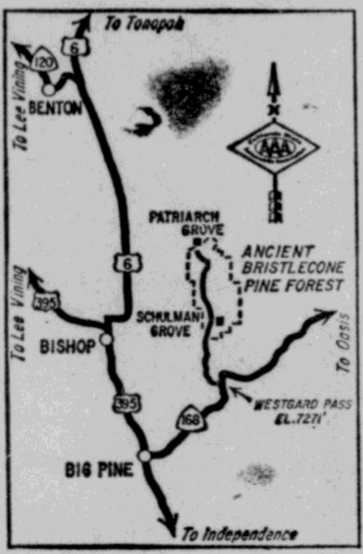
You can go back more than 4,000 years by traveling to the top of the White Mountains bordering the Owens Valley on the eastern side of the Sierra Nevada.

Here the bristlecone pine lives in a remote, forbidding land that rises almost 12,000 feet, seemingly a dead mass of wind-scoured trunks and twisted limbs.

FOR ALL OF their vast age these bleakly tan, gray, reddish and white trees are stunted giants which were growing 1,000 years before the oldest giant redwood broke from the soil.

As you travel up Westgard Pass, east of Big Pine, look west for a view of the Palisades with their sharp peaks towering above their glaciers.

Tilted layers of bedrock are exposed by the streams that flow down from White Mountain as the road winds through impressive narrow canyons. This rock is several million years older than the granite of the Sierra Nevada.



THIS MAP directs the motorist to the home of the rare and ancient bristlecone pine, the oldest of them, Methuselah, 4,600 years.

FROM THE turnoff at Westgard Pass the pinyon-juniper forest is soon replaced by timberline trees, limber pine and bristlecone mixed. As you travel higher, only the bristlecone survives.

All the immensity of the Sierra Nevada can be admired as the road climbs higher. Superlative views of this massive block of granite stretch north and south and you can see 12 of the 14 highest peaks in California.

At 10,000 feet is the Schulman Grove area named after the determiner of the trees' great age, Dr. Edmund Schulman. Here atop the White Mountains he discovered the oldest tree of all, 4,600-year-old Methuselah.

TWO TRAILS lead to the oldest trees with a half-mile hike over easy trail to Pine Alpha, the first 4,000-year-old tree which Schulman dated. It's a two-mile hike along Methuselah Walk and the other many ancients.

The land of the bristlecone has no streams and almost no underbrush, and most of the trees in the forest are less than 30 feet tall, although some may be as much as 50 feet high.

If you look down you will find you are stepping on small plants whose colors blend in well with the rock. Most are in bloom during July and August with their blooms of lavenders, silvers, pale yellows, gray greens, tan, pinks, rusts and dull reds.

ALWAYS GROWING slowly, the bristlecone in dry years just endure their harsh gravelly soil, adding only a microscopic ring, perhaps only adding an inch of growth in 100 years.

Further up the mountain, beyond Schulman Grove, is the Patriach, with a circumference of 36 feet eight inches and only 1,500 years old. Unusual in this area are the "pickaback" trees that grow not up but sideways, adding circumference but not height.

CENTURIES OLD, the gnarled and twisted forms of the bristlecone pines that cling to the eastern slopes of the Sierra Nevada offer visitors to that remote area a never-to-be-forgotten sight. Botanists say they predated the redwoods by a thousand years. (California State Automobile Association photo)

Canada's Yukon Territory Is Heaven To The Fisherman

Are you looking for a fishing spot where you can have a lake or stream to yourself?

Where you won't need to brag about the one that got away, because the ones you catch are bragging size? Where the catch limit works out to 10 fish an hour in six hours of fishing?

And where the license fee for visitors is less than you'd expect to pay for a resident license?

Cast your line in Canada's Yukon Territory.

TUCKED UP in the northwest corner of Canada, right next door to Alaska, the Yukon offers over 200,000 square miles of mountain wilderness and some of the finest fresh water fishing found anywhere.

You can camp free in a government campground or pick your own spot for total privacy. If you're not the camping type, you can stay in a lodge, motel or hotel.

Good to excellent fishing can be found within a few minutes' drive of even the largest city. In 1968, a 19-pound, two-ounce rainbow trout was taken just three miles from Whitehorse, the capital city. Arctic grayling are taken regularly inside the city's boundaries.

OR PERHAPS you really want to get away from it all. Then charter a float plane to take you into one of dozens of remote lakes where it's possible to catch your limit on a few casts.

Several areas have licensed fishing guides who will take you out after the lunkers. Some of them go as far as to guarantee you fish or you don't pay the fee, they're so sure of a catch. The guides will supply their services, along with boat, motor and fishing gear.

Now, about those catch limits:

IN ONE DAY you can haul in 20 northern pike, 10 Arctic grayling, five lake trout, five dolly varden, five kokanee, five rainbow trout, two steelhead and two in the aggregate of King or Coho salmon. Grayling and trout under eight inches must be returned to the water.

Yukon has no closed season on sports fishing and there are no catch limits on whitefish, burbot (ling cod), inconnu (shee fish) or cisco (fresh water herring).

Most popular species, and the most abundant, are the lake trout, Arctic grayling and northern pike.

YUKON FISH are particularly fine eating because of their glacier-fed, blue-water environment. They come in all sizes and a collossal lake trout, taken upstream from the Carcross Bridge, weighed 87 pounds and was five feet, two inches long.

In the lakes which are more easily accessible, lake trout of five to 10 pounds are common and larger ones, up to 30 pounds, are frequently taken. The larger ones are usually caught by anglers fishing from a boat. Twenty to 30-pound lakers are common in the more remote lakes.

Lake trout seem to prefer large bait. It's not unusual to take two pounders on a six to 10 inch spoon. Fresh bait includes frozen smelt, or herring, from a supermarket, or strips of fresh fish.

NEARLY ALL streams crossed by the Alaska Highway and other main roads in the Yukon will yield catches of Arctic grayling, even to inexperienced fishermen.

Many of these streams also support one or more species of trout and visitors often stop at such streams for an on-the-spot fresh fish barbecue.

Grayling, kokanee and members of the trout family are taken on flies, small spinners or spoons. This also applies to whitefish, which are becoming increasingly popular with fly and light tackle fishermen.

THE GENEROUS limit of 20 northern pike is easily filled waters frequented by these fish. The angler's bag often has more than one pike approaching four feet in length.

On top of all this, anglers fishing in the Yukon are given a bonus in unsurpassed mountain scenery, clean waters and clear, invigorating atmosphere, which increases the appetite and makes those freshly-caught fish taste even better.

For more information on fishing Canada's Yukon Territory, contact the Department of Travel and Information, Box 2703, Whitehorse, Yukon.

DON'T CALL IT THE 'SIERRAS'

"I'm off to the High Sierras."

This incorrect reference to the Shining Range, the Snowy Mountain, the Range of Light, is one that is uttered by people who think primarily of its many majestic peaks and spires and pinnacles and domes.

The Sierra Nevada, according to the National Automobile Club, is a single mountain with all its components joined at the foot, a huge block of stone with a total area greater than that of Rhode Island.

Measuring 400 miles in length and 40 to 60 miles in width, the scenic mountain has eight national forests, three national parks, one national monument and five wilderness areas within its reaches.

Of the awe-inspiring peaks, 500 tower more than 12,000 feet in the air. Among the 12 that display glaciered summits over 14,000 feet is Mount Whitney, the second highest point in the United States.

Where Bat Is Respected

Bats, often disdained and even feared, are a popular tourist attraction at Carisbad Caverns National Park in New Mexico.

In immense numbers, the bats emerge from the cave each summer evening, spiral upwards and then stream southward to separate into flocks for night foraging.

The return to the cave is made at dawn when they dive into the entrance and fly directly to what is known as the Bat Cave to spend the day, roosting by hanging downwards from the walls or ceilings in dense clusters.

During the winter most of the bats leave the caverns and migrate to warmer regions.

Guides tell visitors that although bats have long been maligned in folklore and superstition, "the ones here are not only harmless, but beneficial. They destroy harmful insects and produce guano, a valuable fertilizer."

WHITE MEN among the early arrivals in Marin found the Coast Miwoks looking very much like these artist's sketches of California Indians of 1764. At top, the men were nearly nude, except for a deerskin worn around their waists and tied with a strip of leather. And at right, the women, who wore only tule, bark or deerskin skirts in warm weather, added capes of deer or other animal hides for cooler temperatures.

Before The Trip Must Come The Shots

The Travel Pages

By MURRAY J. BROWN

NEW YORK (UPI)—So you are all set for your first trip aboard. You have your passport and visas and confirmed transportation and hotel and other reservations.

Now all you have to do is wait for your departure date, grab your bags, kiss your relatives goodby, and take off.

Right?

Wrong!

When was the last time you were vaccinated against smallpox? If it was more than three years ago, you might have to be inoculated again. And, depending on your travel plans, it may be necessary to have other shots.

ALL AMERICANS traveling overseas, except in certain areas in the Western Hemisphere, are required to have proof of immunization against smallpox. And the vaccinations MUST be recorded in the official International Certificates of Vaccination and bear the authorized stamp of your local public health service.

True, there are some foreign countries where officials don't even look inside the special form approved by the World Health Organization (WHO). But there are others who check carefully and may refuse you admission if the health record is not properly executed and authenticated.

The U.S. Public Health Service also requires validated proof of such immunity from American citizens returning from foreign travel, with the exception of the specifically-exempt areas. Failure to provide such evidence could mean vaccination at the port of entry or surveillance up to 14 days, or both, or even detention for up to two weeks.

THE 16-PAGE health record can be obtained at U.S. Passport agency offices or from your travel agent and airlines and steamship companies. I keep mine stapled to my passport as a precaution against loss and to help speed clearance through control points.

Your travel agent or carrier should be able to advise you if other immunizations may be necessary. These, too, should be entered in the official certificate.

In some countries, inoculations against yellow fever and cholera are mandatory and you could be turned back or quarantined for up to two weeks. These immunizations also must be validated by your local health authority.

AMERICANS, WHO have visited or passed through countries where cholera, smallpox, typhus and other contagious diseases may be prevalent, face surveillance or detention for up to 14 days on return to the United States unless they have had the necessary inoculations.

Immunization against yellow fever, good for 10 years, can be only obtained at specified U.S. Public Health centers. Anti-cholera shots, valid for six months, and other required and recommended vaccinations may be administered by your own doctor.

For all international travel, the Public Health Service recommends protection against tetanus, diphtheria and poliomyelitis.

THE RECOMMENDATION for anti-typhoid shots was dropped last year for Americans visiting Europe and other developed areas. But there have been outbreaks of the disease, however, in a number of countries with high sanitary standards so you might want to take precautions anyway.

All inoculations should be obtained well in advance of departure, not only because of possible reactions but some require a series of injections spaced over several weeks. And the immunizations are not considered effective until after periods ranging from six to 10 days.

As an additional protection, take a medical checkup while you get your shots. If your doctor should prescribe medication, take an ample supply as well as the prescription in case of emergency.

SEE YOUR dentist, too, and, if you wear glasses, take an extra pair and the prescription just in case. A first aid kit also could come in handy.

Travelers with heart ailments, diabetes, hemophilia, allergies and other health problems should wear tags or bracelets detailing their medical history. Such information could prove invaluable in emergencies.

Tags and bracelets can be obtained by writing to the non-profit Medic-Alert Foundation International at Turlock, Calif. The Medic-Alert disc—there is a charge—also carries the telephone number of its headquarters where collect calls may be made day or night for additional information if the bearer is stricken suddenly.

FOR FURTHER peace of mind, there is Intermedic. There is probably nothing more frightening than to fall ill in some country where the language is different from your own.

Intermedic provides members with a directory listing almost 400 doctors, and their telephone numbers, in some 80 countries overseas who speak English. Participating physicians provide services day or night for stipulated fees—at this writing, no more than $8 for an office visit, $10 for the first house or hotel call, and $15 for an emergency night call.

Membership for one year is $5 for an individual and $9 for a family. Intermedic's headquarters is at 777 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y., 10017.

The Feminine Touch In Tokyo

Women now are inspecting luggage at Tokyo International Airport.

To overcome a labor shortage and add a touch of glamor to travel, customs officials put 11 women in uniform and assigned them to inspect the baggage of passengers from abroad.

The women inspectors formerly were detailed to search women travelers suspected of smuggling narcotics or other contraband in their clothing.

NOTES TO TRAVEL BY

Japan Air Lines reports that fears of monumental jams and confusion on the Expo '70 grounds at Osaka and nearby hotels have proven unfounded, and that there are still seats on week day flights and hotel accommodations available to tour groups and individuals . . . "World Travel Directory—1970," described as "the who's who of the travel industry," has been published by Robinson-Ingledue Travel Publications of 5850 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, 90028, and sells for $24 a copy.

Trans-World Airlines is offering a New York City Festival of the Art Tour that takes travelers into artists' studios and galleries under the guidance of expert and critic Alberto Cernuschi at $228 per person including accommodations in the New York Hilton . . . Weekend guest certificates in $10 and $50 denominations are being offered at 1,100 Holiday Inns . . .Miami Beach, suffering a dearth of visitors, has launched a courtesy campaign through its Tourist Development Authority after a survey showed rudeness was a major factor in the drop-off.

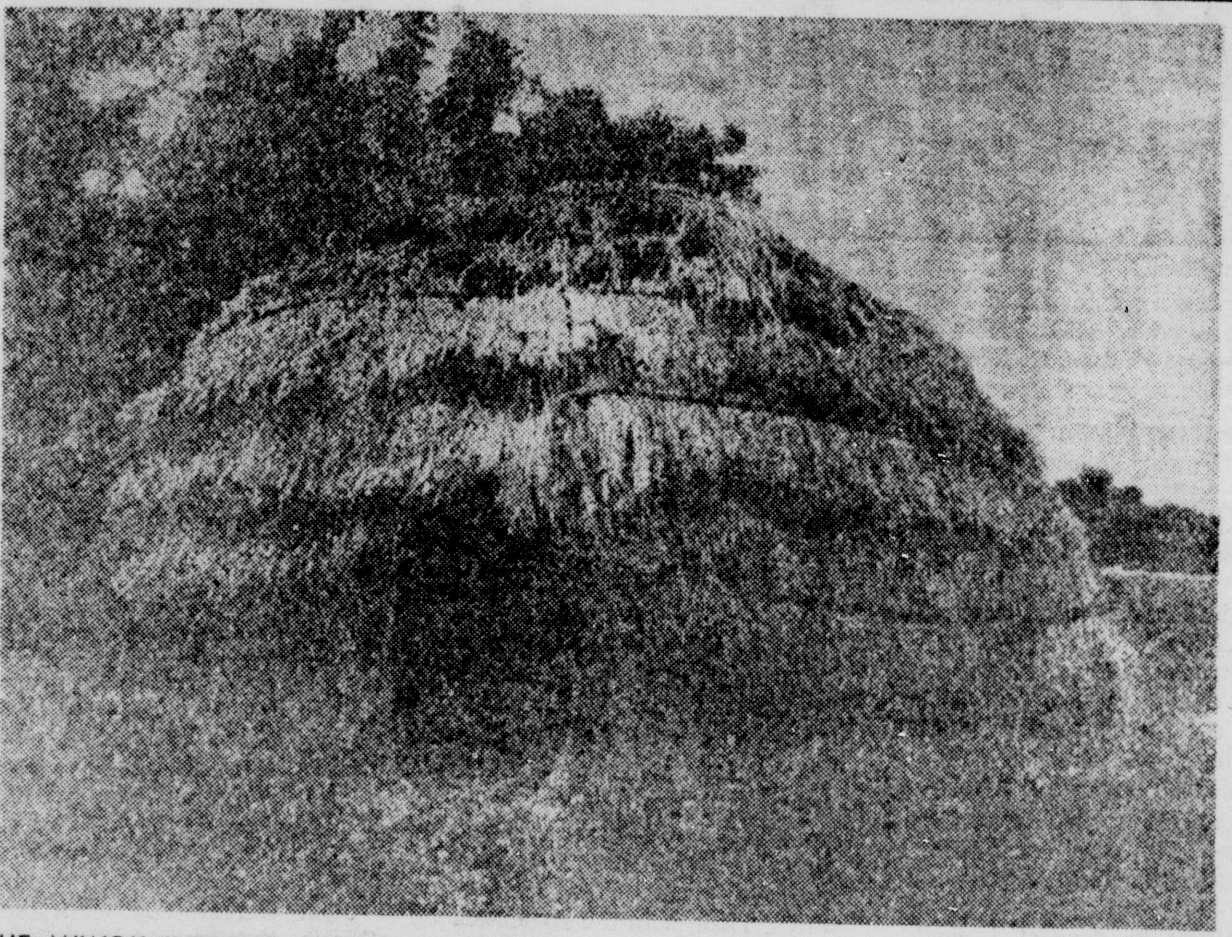
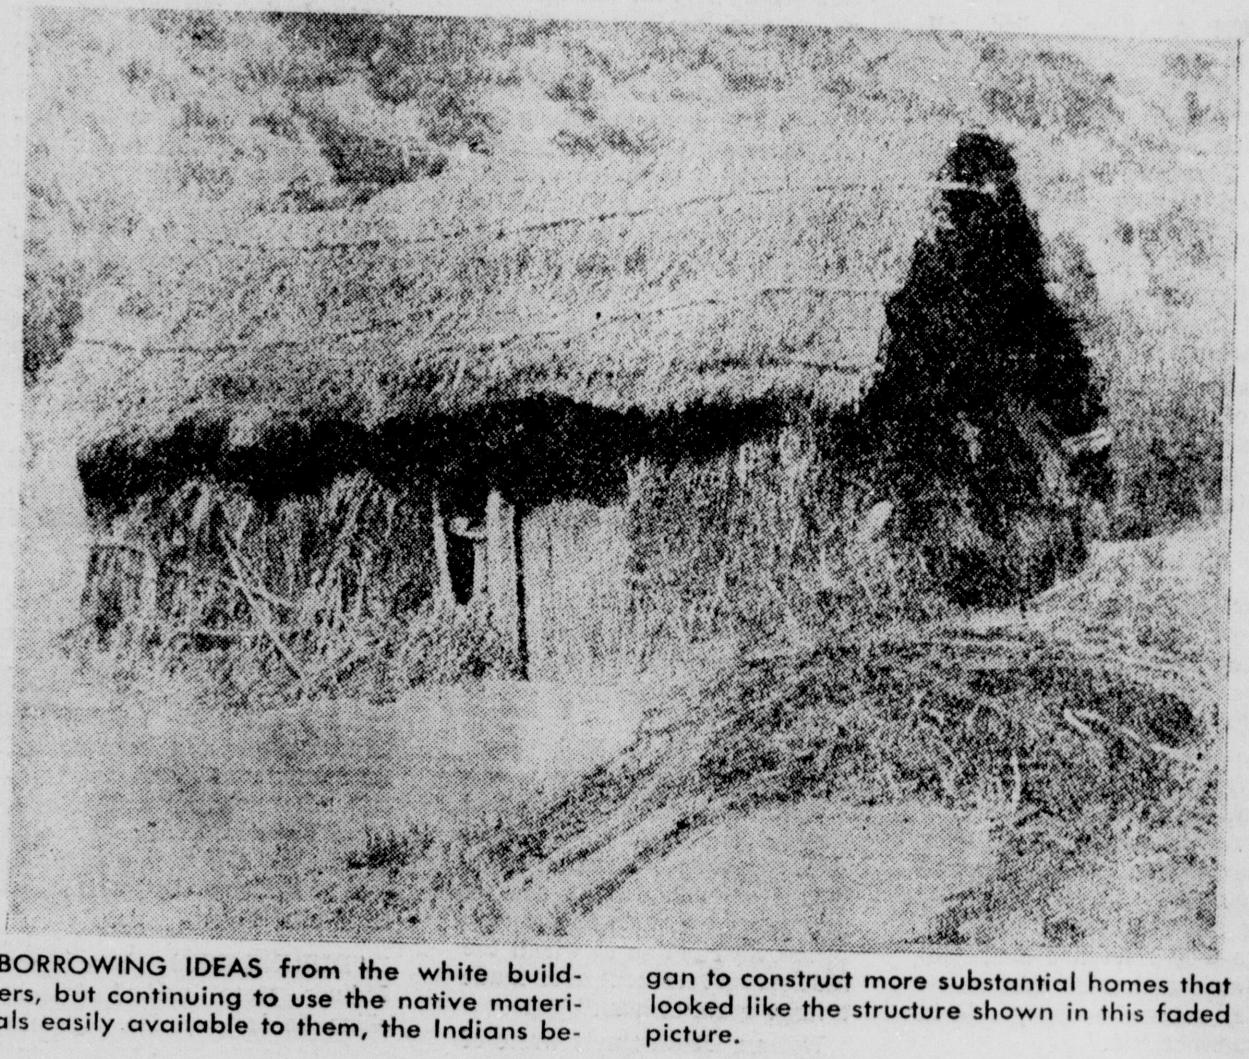
The Indians Of Marin—

Miwoks Led A Good Life Before White Man Came



THE MIWOK INDIANS were living in these "bee-hive" shape huts when the first white men reached Marin County. Constructed of poles and tules or bulrushes, the dwellings were built around a firepit with a hole at the top to allow the smoke to escape.



BORROWING IDEAS from the white builders, but continuing to use the native materials easily available to them, the Indians began to construct more substantial homes that looked like the structure shown in this faded picture.

that were used as money and as ornaments (mistaken for bone by the English).

FROM THESE visitors Kroeber borrowed this description of the Indian bows and arrows:

"Their bows and arrows which are their only weapons and almost all the wealth, they use skillfully, yet without much execution, they being fitter for children than for men (so the small bows would have seemed when compared with the powerful weapons of the English archers).

"Yet they (the Indians) are usually so strong that one of them could easily carry that a mile together without pain which two or three Englishmen could hardly bear. They run very swiftly and long, and seldom go any other pace; if they see a fish so near shore as to reach the place without swimming, they seldom miss it.

"DIVING FOR fish in the ocean has not been reported for any Californians, but several tribes are said to have taken salmon by hand in pools of considerable depth."

In analyzing the Drake report, Kroeber says: "Only the canoe in which one man put out to meet the ship and in which others subsequently appear to have paddled, when the English boat 'could row no way out but they would follow them,' presents a discrepancy. There is no authentic record of true canoes on the whole coast from Cape Mendocino to the vicinity of San Luis Obispo.

"Either custom has changed since Drake's day, or his 'canoe' was a loose term for the tule balsa which is often boatshaped, with raised sides, especially when intended for navigation.

"THERE IS NO doubt that, like Cabrillo . . .Drake was received with marked kindness. The simplest explanation is that the Indians regarded the whites as returned dead. Such a belief would account for their repeated wailing and self-laceration, as well as the burned sacrifice of feathers."

"Evidence on the final test — speech — is too scant to be conclusive, but it is at least favorable to the opinion that Drake's friends must have been Coast Miwoks. The herb, 'tobah,' which was presented in little baskets, is, of course, tobacco. And the root called 'patah' from which they made bread or ate it either baked or raw, refers to the Broadieaea and other lily bulbs consumed in quantities by all Californians. The word, however, stands for potato."

THE NEXT significant report of the Marin Indians came as the result of the 1595 visit to California's shores by the Portuguese, Sebastian Rodriguez Cermeno.

Cermeno had been given permission by Luis de Velasco, viceroy of New Spain (Mexico), to pilot a ship to the Philippines on a voyage of discovery, particularly to pinpoint ports where ships on future voyages might land to rest their crews and replenish food supplies. Cermeno was also authorized to carry freight in order to earn money from the venture.

He sailed from Acapulco on the San Pedro and reached the Philippines safely. There, he transferred to the San Agustin, and with a crew of 70 men and 130 tons of cargo on board, left Cavite July 5, 1595, on the return trip.

OFF THE California coast, the San Agustin was hard hit by a storm that ripped off part of her deck.

Despite the objections of his crew, Cermeno brought the ship into Drake's Bay on Nov. 6, 1595.

Robert Fleming Heizer, writing for the California Historical Society Quarterly of December, 1941, quoted from Cermeno's log:

"Many Indians appeared on the beach and one of them came out to the ship in a tule balsa which he propelled with a paddle at each end. He remained beside the ship for some time talking in his language. Some cotton cloth, silk and a red cap were given to him.

"EARLY THE next morning four men, each rowing a tule balsa, came out to the ship and remained along side talking. They were given gifts of cloth after which they went ashore."

Cermeno then went ashore with 22 of his men in a ship's boat, landing on the beach near some Indian habitations.

He reported: "The people were well built, robust and inclined to fatness. The men were entirely naked, but the women wore grass or skin skirts. The hair was worn long, and body painting on the breast and arms was observed."

Cermeno took formal possession of the land in the name of the King of Spain. Then he and his men, in military formation, marched to the Indian village "about a harquebus-shot" from the shore.

THE INDIANS, about 50 in number and all adults, proved peaceful and gave their visitors some small seeds. Such seeds, crabs, wild birds and elk were found to be the dietary staples of the Indians.

The Cermeno party then proceeded inland for less than two miles where they met a band of Indian men, who upon seeing the newcomers, formed a circle and "uttered loud howls." A leader, carrying a tall banner of black feathers, approached the exploring party. Friendly Indians from the coastal village who had accompanied the white men talked to the new arrivals — "whereupon the latter laid down their bows and approached in a humble manner as if terrorized."

The native leader presented Cermeno with the black feather banner while other Indians handed over their bows to the Spaniards.

THE REPORT speaks of black and red paint on the faces of the Indians.

And Caroline O'Hara in her manuscript, "Indians of Marin County," giving as her sources Hubert Howe Bancroft's "Native Races of the Pacific Coast" and Bulletin 30, Bureau of American Ethnology, Washington, D. C., tells how the Indians, "small and so dark as to be almost black," were fond of painting their faces "in triangles and lines of vermillion."

The dyes, she said, were obtained by bartering with friendly tribes that lived near the New Almaden cinnabar mine.

CERMENO PUT into use a launch from the San Agustin that had been obtained in the Philippines, and several expeditions were made inland to obtain acorns and hazelnuts. They visited several additional Indian villages.

Disaster struck the Europeans when a heavy gale drove the San Agustin aground, wrecking the ship. Several men were lost. And there was the first trouble with the Indian villagers when some of the natives attempted to carry off wood from the damaged ship.

Dr. Heizer and others from the University of California discovered porcelain fragments while excavating on the Point Reyes Peninsula in 1940 that were believed to have been part of the San Agustin's cargo. Another expedition in 1941 discovered additional fragments.

CERMENO AND his crew suffered hunger and danger before, on Dec. 8, they pushed off from the Marin shore in the small Philippine launch. Seven weeks later, they reached port in Mexico.

Early white visitors were interested in the leisurely life enjoyed by the Coast Miwoks.

There were great feasts with the people enjoying dancing, singing and instrumental music. That music was discordant to the ears of the visitors, but it had a definite rhythm.

THERE WERE whistles made from hollow bones and flutes from hollow reeds. And rattles of dry, round sticks, split down the middle.

And dancing and music seemed a part of every occasion — at weddings, at funerals, to

The Anatomy Of A Mad Mass Murderer

LINGARD by Colin Wilson; Crown, 286 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Colin Wilson, once the "whiz kid" of British literature, has been long been fascinated by violent crime — particularly the murderer who kills, not once, but several or many times.

Earlier this year he had published a study of murder through the centuries in which his thesis, supported not entirely convincingly, was that there have been trends or styles in homicide that are distinctive of their periods and thus are among the most revealing sources of understanding of man's past and present.

Now, in this novel, Wilson has relied heavily upon past research for that and earlier books to create a fictional multiple-killer.

His protagonist, Arthur James Lingard, is patterned principally after the infamous Dusseldorf mass murderer Peter Kurten. But Wilson also uses the case histories of other celebrated slayers in constructing Lingard's character and background.

His narrator is Dr. Kahn, psychiatrist for the prison where Lingard is incarcerated. The book deals with Kahn's almost obsessive investigation into the factors and motives that have made Lingard a rapist and killer.

The story that Kahn uncovers is sordid — of an orphaned boy who has transferred his Oedipus attachment unhealthily to his older sister. Who began mixing his undisciplined sexual appetite with fantasies in which he built up a wholly unrealistic, all-powerful picture of himself that he could never fulfill. The record discloses an arrogant, yet uncertain boy, youth and young man who has declared himself beyond the normal restraints of society.

To Wilson, his Lingard is an example falling somewhere between two classic patterns of violent criminals:

"The right man" type as outlined in A.E. Van Vogt's "The Violent Man" — the person who paranoically refuses to admit the possibility that he is or was ever wrong. It is a category in which belong many of the world's despots and dictators.

Wilson's own "outsider" classification — a person more imaginative and talented than those around him, possessor of more will and drive than they do. But whose special qualities are misdirected.

Lingard, however, seems much closer to Van Vogt's "right man" than to Wilson's "outsider." His special abilities exist only in relation to the generally drab people around him and the dreariness of his environment (an exception is his earthy sister Pauline, a far stronger and more interesting character than Lingard). His will and drive sputter and falter, even in their misdirection.

Wilson describes "Lingard" as "an attempt to point out that 'right men,' are not necessarily and completely wrong."

The effect upon this reader was the opposite. Lingard seemed to us an example of just how very wrong and just how dangerous these egomaniacs can be. And we do have many among us who cannot conceive or concede of their ever being mistaken. All are not violent criminals. But all are potential menaces.

Wilson has written with his usual fine feeling for rhetoric an unpleasant book saturated with sex and heavy with the confusions and heartaches of today's troubled society. It is not a book that makes with any clarity the kind of point he says he is attempting. It describes one aspect of man's malaise, but the treatments suggested seem to deal with symptoms, not the disease.

The Story Of Jerusalem Holds Key To Today's Mideast Crisis

TEMPLE BEYOND TIME by Mina C. Klein and H. Arthur Klein; Van Nostrand Reinhold, 191 pages. Reviewed by Paul Brindel.

"We cannot escape history," Abraham Lincoln warned in his second annual message to Congress.

Considering the millions this country has poured into Israel since its Independence Day, May 15, 1948, this book seems to be almost "must reading." It is "the story of the site of Solomon's Temple," but it compresses 30 centuries of history — King David in 1000 B.C. buying Mount Moriah, site of the first temple, founding Jerusalem which for centuries was to be called "the City of David."

"No city in all man's history is more famous," the man-and-wife authors point out. Besides the successive temples of Solomon, Zerubabbel and Herod the Great, Christian churches dating to the Byzantine era, there is the Dome of the Rock built in the Seventh Century on Mount Moriah to mark the place from which Mohammed ascended to paradise. Today's Middle East crisis "can only be understood through knowledge of the past," the authors insist.

Except from A.D. 1095 to 1171 when the Crusaders held Jerusalem, the book reveals that Jews "managed to live in or near the city" from its destruction and the temple by Titus in A.D. 75 to 1948 when the original "Old City" of Jerusalem became a part of Jordan. For the ensuing 19 years, until the "Six Day War" of June, 1967, Jews were excluded.

Yet, for the 12 and a half centuries Islam ruled the city, there is recounted some "accommodation" between Moslems and Jews. In 1847, the latter had grown to be the majority of the population of Jerusalem.

Mark Twain was the first American of note to visit Mount Moriah and the Dome of the Rock in 1867, from which non-Moslems had been excluded until 1865. In "Innocents Abroad," the humorist described his visit in detail.

A Seminar For Writers

Blair Fuller, Herbert Gold and Oakley Hall will conduct a "non-conference" for writers and persons interested in writing Aug. 22-29 at Squaw Valley, sponsored by University of California Extension.

A few short manuscripts will be selected for use in workshop sessions.

Mornings will be devoted to methods of developing personal expression as well as to the disciplines needed for effective communication. Afternoon sessions will offer general discussions of poetry, short fiction, the novel, non-fiction and the adaptation of fiction to film. There will also be evening meetings on such topics as "Can creative writing be taught?"

Delicate Topic, Quaintly Handled

HOW TO MAKE LOVE by Locke McCorkle; Grove Press, 147 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Marji Parr.

Man is the least instinctive beast in the animal kingdom; therefore, he must take lessons on making love. So holds the Bay Area author of this book, subtitled "The Spiritual Nature of Sex."

And, indeed, he may have a point. If only to unlearn what's been taught.

Locke McCorkle (obviously not a made-up name, unless perhaps by W. C. Fields), has, according to the book flap, combined writing with the construction business. One fancies him as one of those muscular street knaves that you just know is an artist or poet when he isn't making money. (An illusion shattered if he's neglected to use his Right Guard.)

But enough romancing, and back to "How to Make Love," a title reminiscent of the advertising theory that "How to" ads always sell. The book scores in the technique chapters, but is inclined to lose in the spiritual chapters, which are interwoven.

In a delicate subject, the style rarely offends, although there are those who prefer Anglo-Saxon brevity to mawkish euphemism.

On the plus side, McCorkle takes on the women's liberation issue solving the matter for once and all by instructing the "bra-burners" to give in, not to a man, but to their own sexuality.

On the minus side, McCorkle fluffs over lightly the encounter thing that's all around us . . . with sketchy references to the "Odd-Ball Circuit." It cannot be denied that the encounter movement is effecting some changes in some sexual patterns. It's shaking them up, anyhow.

The gallant McCorkle suggests that when the lady indicates an interest in making love, the gentleman, be he ever so bored with the idea, always professes enthusiasm. A charming notion, if impractical.

Non-traditional sex, the kind that is occasionally against the law, is simply left out of the book.

"How to Make Love" would be more agreeable if it were less quaintly sentimental, less arch. Nevertheless, it does have some helpful hints to the homemaker.

"Can Ball Point Ink Be Removed From A Garment?"

As strange as it may sound, hair-spray, the American Institute of Laundering has found, will remove ball-point ink stain.

Ball point ink stains have been a long-time headache for cleaners and home-makers. Removal has been a real trial. Now, A.I.L. suggests that any surface ink be scraped from the fabric. Care should be taken not to damage the fabric when scraping. Then apply ordinary lady's hair-spray. Allow it to dry, then have the garment drycleaned or laundered. If any stain remains, and some may, repeat the process. The A.I.L. Laboratory says you'll regain full usefulness from the ball-point ink stained garment by this method.

Whites Brought End To A Way Of Life

celebrate good hunting and fishing, to mark a plentiful acorn harvest, etc.

There were contests of skill, too, to provide the Indians with amusement — running, hunting, swimming.

THE CHILDREN learned to swim almost as soon as they could walk. And they climbed trees to swing high in the air from branches.

The men played stick games in which they dropped handsful of sticks on a hide spread upon the ground and around which they squatted. And there is some evidence that the Indians gambled with shells as they played these games.

Each village had its shaman or medicine man, responsible for keeping away the evil spirits with his songs and dances. Sometimes he concocted medicinal brews, for the Indians knew the special properties of many of the herbs of the area.

WHEN A villager died, all Indians mourned, with the men silent, the women wailing. The body might be cremated or buried. If buried, the dead person's most treasured possessions — polished abalone shells, arrow heads, etc. — went into the earth with him.

Written records dealing with Marin Indians from 1595 to 1776 are lacking.

Honoria Twomey in her "History of Sonoma County" gives the date July, 1776, for the time when two young Spaniards sent by Juan de Ayala, commander of the San Carlos, visited an Indian village in Marin.

SUBSEQUENTLY, De Ayala sent out other expeditions, and his shipmaster, Capt. Fernando Quiros, sailed the ship's boat up the Petaluma River.

Two other Spaniards were sent from Lime Point into Marin and historians recorded their observances as they rode along the bay shore until they came to "a gurgling brook splashing along the well-wooded hillsides where they refreshed their jaded steeds and were themselves regaled after the weary ride in the summer sun."

They noted that their surroundings showed evidence of long use as a camp by an Indian tribe. And when they encountered those Indians, they were received with hospitality that they returned by teaching the natives the skills of adobe brick making and house building.

THESE WERE the Olumpalis, later changed to the Olompalis. And under the supervision of the visiting Spaniards, the Indians built for their chief an adobe house, really a simple structure of but one room, 16 by 24 feet. But it must have seemed a marvel to the Indians, accustomed only to their crude wickiups.

How long the Spaniards remained at Olompali is not known, but it was probably a visit of short duration.

However, a second adobe dwelling, this one a larger structure, 24 by 56 feet, was also built at right angles to the first. And it became the home of the tribe's chief.

WITH ONLY periodic visits from white men, the Indians of Marin continued to live very much as they had lived for centuries. Then, with the dedication of the Mission San Rafael Arcangel in 1817 as part of the Franciscan mission chain in California, a great change was wrought in the lives of the natives.

Some resisted the attempts to Christianize them, regarding the missionaries as invaders and remaining aloof from the mission activities. But others listened to the new teachers, gaining not only a new religion but also the rudiments of an education.

One such was Camilo Ynitia, who succeeded his father as chief of the Olompalis and who was respected and praised by white men as well as his fellow Indians.

YNITIA WAS granted two square leagues, the Olompali Rancho, on Oct. 22, 1843, by Manuel Micheltorena, the Mexican governor after Mexico had gained its independence and assumed the administration of California.

The late Steve Richardson, son of Marin pioneer Capt. William Richardson, described Camilo Ynitia as "a man of marked ability, clean-cut, capable, all-around. To the best of my knowledge, he was the only full-blooded Indian to whom the Mexican government ever made a large grant of land."

William Heath Davis wrote of the Olompali chief:

"I KNEW (HIM) as a fine, intelligent man. He often came to San Francisco to purchase goods from Nathan Spear, whose agent I was then. He owned 600 cattle, numerous horses and sheep, and was a quite noted breeder. He was punctual in meeting his obligations, and because of this and his affability and intelligence, he was highly esteemed by all of us.

"He could read and write and keep accounts, having been educated by the missionaries at Mission San Rafael Arcangel. He was, likewise, a wheat-raiser and sold his crops to the Russians (who had established a settlement at Fort Ross).

"At the death of Solano (who had been General Vallejo's contact with the tribes), Camilo directed the burial with all tribal honors. General Vallejo always treated Camilo and Solano with high consideration because it was through these men he controlled and conquered tribes of Indians without shedding blood. It was also with their assistance that he had command of all the laborers he needed for his vast improvements in Sonoma and Petaluma."

RECORDS AT Mission San Rafael Arcangel up to 1822 show 829 Indians baptized, 244 married, 183 dead and 830 surviving.

The death rate is not so high as might first appear, since the mission was established to provide care for neophytes from Mission Dolores who were already ailing and sometimes dying.

Juan Garcia, son of Rafael Garcia, grantee of a large Marin rancho, told how his father, then a corporal, was sent by Luis Antonio Arguello, commandant of the Presidio at San Francisco, to Marin on a good-will mission.

"HE WAS SENT to San Rafael on a sort of raft that drifted up the bay with the tide and was able to effect a landing at what is known as McNear's Point today. When he went ashore he was greeted by friendly Indians, who to the number of about 500 were camped where the B. B. McNear home (Glenwood) is today."

Garcia said several tribes of Indians were then headquartered in Marin, with some of them living in the willows at the foot of San Rafael's B street.

"The tidewater in the days of the mission and for many years thereafter came up to E Street, and all the land east of B Street was a beautiful clam bed at low tide, where the Indians secured their supply of clams and mussels. The east end of the town, from B Street to the bay, was covered at high tide, and at the foot of B Street the Indians had their rancheria.

"DURING THE winter these Indians were garbed in elk skins. In fact, all the wigwams and all the interior furnishing of same were made from skins of elk . . .

"I remember as a boy when the missionaries would use the water from San Rafael Hill to irrigate the orchard. This water was run down through a ditch. It was a novel irrigation scheme, and worked beautifully. The missionaries were very skillful at different trades and never shirked work themselves.

"Sundays and holy days of obligation were great days at the mission. The Indians and their families would come from miles around and attend mass in the mission church. They would bring venison, clams and hides to the missionaries, and in return would take away provisions obtainable at the mission storehouse.

"THE NICASIO Tribe, who were once powerful and numbered by the thousands, were inclined to be war-like, and whenever they arrived in San Rafael the missionaries had all they could do to prevent quarreling . . .

"For weeks before Easter Sunday, the missionaries were occupied in instructing the Indian children for the sacrament of confirmation . . . Two days before Easter, the Indians began arriving in San Rafael until, on the great day, several thousand were camped here and in the valley, the squaws dressed in every color of the rainbow, and the man in pants of elk skins and wearing warpaint.

"In the lower end of town, every tree and shrub was used as a hitching post for the Indian ponies. The carcasses of two score elk were roasted and served to the Indians . . ."

GARCIA TOLD, too, how Fr. Juan Amoroso secured a number of musical string instruments from Spain and formed a seven-member orchestra of young Indians.

The older Garcia told his son, too, of the scenes in the evenings among the wigwam clusters.

"Here and there among the wigwams one would encounter the mothers with suckling babes at their breasts, while they worked with pestles crushing grain in the mortars. Here and there one would discern a squaw loaded down with a burden of wood. Or a young buck returning with elk, deer, rabbits and other prey from the forest. Or fishermen coming back with the produce of the rivers, bay and ocean.

"THE YOUNG squaws, the belles of the day, painted with all the colors of the rainbow and decked in gorgeous calicos and burdened with shell and bead ornaments, occupied places of advantage beneath the spreading oaks for which the valley was famous in early days.

"Bucks, young and old, squatted here and there, smoking their long pipes and awaiting the evening dinner call."

But such happy scenes ended with the Mexican government's decree secularizing the missions. The friars left Mission San Rafael Arcangel. And the Indians dispersed.

DON TIMOTEO Murphy, as agent for the Marin Indians, succeeded in obtaining for them the grant of 20 square leagues in the Nicasio Valley. But after his death, the claim was voided by the land commission.

The Indians had also been promised a third of the horses at the mission plus other livestock. But there is no record that this promise was kept.

The Indians who had lived at the Mission San Rafael Arcangel had learned to speak Spanish, the language of the Franciscans, and such useful trades as boat-building, blacksmithing, metal work and carpentry, as well as farming and stockraising. But few could find work in such fields.

INSTEAD, THE owners of the large ranchos now found themselves with a vast source of labor, for which they had to pay only a pittance.

Some of these ranchers treat-

Two Sages Diagnose The Sick Society

THE PURSUIT OF LONELINESS by Philip Slater; Beacon Press, 154 pages, $7.50.

THE CRAZY APE by Albert Szent-Gyorgyi; Philosophical Library, 93 pages, $3.95.

By DON KEOWN

ALBERT Szent-Gyorgyi was born in Hungary in 1893 and educated in Budapest and at Cambridge. In 1937 he won the Nobel Prize for his studies on metabolism and for his discovery of ascorbic acid (Vitamin C). During World War II he was a fugitive, hunted by the Nazis. And after the war he fled Europe and Stalinism to come to this country where he has since carried on research at the Marine Biological Laboratory at Woods Hole, Mass. In his book, "The Crazy Ape," he expresses his despair at the way society has used his work and that of his colleagues in science, and challenges youth to build a better society making a richer, beneficial use of technology.

The Book Pages

Two learned men, one an educator and social scientist, the other a researcher and physical scientist, have authored books in which they diagnose the condition of American culture as critical.

While they share the belief that our society is gravely ill, they are not in total accord as to the germs that have caused our sickness, nor as to the antidote that should be prescribed for recovery.

Philip Slater, Brandeis University's sociology department chairman, in his "The Pursuit of Loneliness," blames our problems upon our obsession with technology.

"I am arguing," he writes, "for a reversal of our old pattern of technological radicalism and social conservatism. We pretend that. . .we actually achieve social stability — that technological change can be confined within its own sphere. Yet this is not so. Technological instability creates social instability as well, and we lose both ways."

Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi, research scientist at the Marine Biological Laboratory, Woods Hole, Mass., and Nobel Prize winner for his discovery of Vitamin C, sees the problem differently in his "The Crazy Ape."

"It is evident to me," he writes, "that a world created by science can be run safely only by the spirit and methods of the science which created it. It is impossible to create a new world by means of science and then run it on the basis of outdated, sentimental principles like fear, lust for power and domination."

For Dr. Szent-Gyorgyi, "the spirit of science is that of goodwill, mutual respect and human solidarity." To him science has been the victim, not the culprit. It has not been the scientist who has misused the products of his creativity, but rather his exploiters.

But Slater sees technology itself as an enemy running wild, although he emphasizes that he is not advocating "any brand of bucolic romanticism."

"I only want to remove them (the machines) from their position of mastery," he says, "to restore human beings to a position of equality and initiative."

To regain his dignity, Slater warns, man must renounce his allegiance to the outworn concept of individualism, and adopt the communal and collective approaches suited to today's highly complicated civilization.

Slater is in agreement with psychiatrist Dr. Alexander Lowen who in his "Pleasure" (June 6 Marin Magazine) outlined his thesis that mankind has chosen the wrong objectives — money and power — when it should be striving for pleasure.

"In our society pleasure is allowable only as a means to an end which is itself a mere means," Slater claims. "It must in some way or another yield energy for the economy. Pleasure is made scarce, for example, by making it illegal. . ."

A direct confrontation between Philip Slater and Dr. Szent Gyorgyi to debate the proposition — has man perverted science, or has science enslaved man? — would be a memorable encounter. Perhaps there is some truth to both their charges, and man now finds himself subjugated by a Frankenstein of his own creation. But in this indirect collision of ideas through their books, at least, Slater seems to have a bit the better of the argument.

"We say," he writes, "this or that invention is valuable because it generates other inventions — because it is a means to some other means — not because it achieves an ultimate human end. We play down the 'side effects' that so often become the main effects and completely negate any alleged benefits.

"The advantages of all technological 'progress' will, after all, be totally outweighed the moment nuclear war breaks out. . ."

Despite some basic differences in their ideas, the shared concern of Philip Slater and Albert Szent-Gyorgyi brings them closer together in their thinking than they are separate.

The latter is as distrustful as the former of the old culture, and incensed by what he sees as a double moral standard for the individual and for the community or government.

"We go to the polls to elect hawks and vote endless billions for war and the formidable machines of killing and destruction, and then go to church and ask for God's blessing," Szent-Gyorgyi writes.

"Who will defend us against defense departments?" he cries.

His answer to his own question is that youth must undertake that task. He urges the young people of all countries to "get together and hammer out the constitution of the world they want to build." But he adds that not only must they plan for the future, but they must take immediate action by "hunting out of their governments the merchants of death and destruction."

The last is a suggestion that can only cause disquiet in an already nervous Establishment.

In two small books these two sages have given us much food for thought. In the finer analysis, their differences are not irreconcilable. Their agreement that there is cause for alarm and that there must be change — drastic change — is the central, urgent message of both books.

"UNDER THE Moon of Mars" (Holt, Rinehart and Winston, $7.95) is a history and anthology, with Sam Moskowitz as author and editor, of the curious fiction genre known as the "scientific romance" that began with the publication of Edgar Rice Burrough's adventure story of the book title in 1912. The selections are taken from the Munsey pulp magazines, and Moskowitz' history is as much a story of those publications as it is a story of the scientific romance tale.

Scence fiction fans, and particularly the older ones with lingering memories of the pulps, will regard this newest book with the same enthusiasm they have displayed for earlier Moskowitz-edited collections.

THE NOVEL "All About Hatterr" by G. V. Desani that achieved an "underground" popularity after its publication in 1948 has been reprinted by Farrar, Straus and Giroux in a $5.95 edition and is now billed as "a modern classic." Said T. S. Eliot of it: "In all my experience, I have never met with anything quite like it." You'll probably say the same. Certainly the language — "a sort of creative chaos," wrote Anthony Burgess — is unique. And language is the essence of the book.

DOVER Publications has issued a $3.75 reprint in its distinctive high quality paperback format of Janet Waring's "Early American Stencils on Walls and Furniture." The work, accepted as the most authoritative book available on its subject, a now nearly vanished art, first appeared in 1937, and is republished unabridged, with 166 plates of illustrations, showing views of stencils, close-ups of detail and tools.

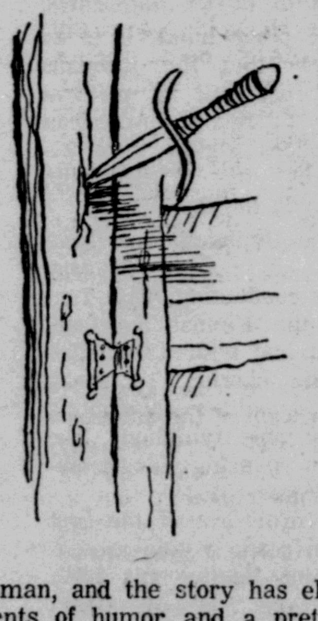
THE ESSAYS that make up his "Dr. Outlandish: Drug Scene and Sundry Subjects" are described by their author, Dr. Charles H. Sprague, as "an antidote to hysteria."

Sprague, project director for a clinic, is one of those physicians who have stepped outside the medical Establishment to work with alienated youth and to write for the underground press. Dr. Outlandish is the name he has signed to those articles. And his chapter titles include the likes of "On 'Doing Up' in General and 'Speed' in Particular" and "In Pursuit of the Powder-Blue Double-Barrel Peppermint Metal-Flake Wedge."

The theme is not pro-drug. But society's present methods of dealing with the problem are often questioned. And Sprague attempts to use the verniacular of today's young to reach and impress upon them the danger of undisciplined experimentation.

Sleuths & Suspense

THE SECRET HOUSE OF DEATH by Ruth Rendell; Doubleday, 179 pages, $4.50. Reviewed by Mary Leydecker.



The setting is one of those dreary suburbs where neighbors delight in what appears to be a love affair between a housewife and a man who sells furnaces. Although the scene is England, there is a ring of familiarity about the situation for American suburbanites.

When Louise North and her suspected lover are found dead, everyone, including Susan Townsend, a rather sad young divorcee who lives next door, accepts the verdict of suicide.

Susan is even rather kind to Louise's bereaved husband.

In the end, however, Susan — and the reader — are convinced that circumstances were not at all as they appeared.

Susan is a likeable young woman, and the story has elements of humor and a pretty good surprise good ending.

Not at all a bad way to spend a couple of hours.

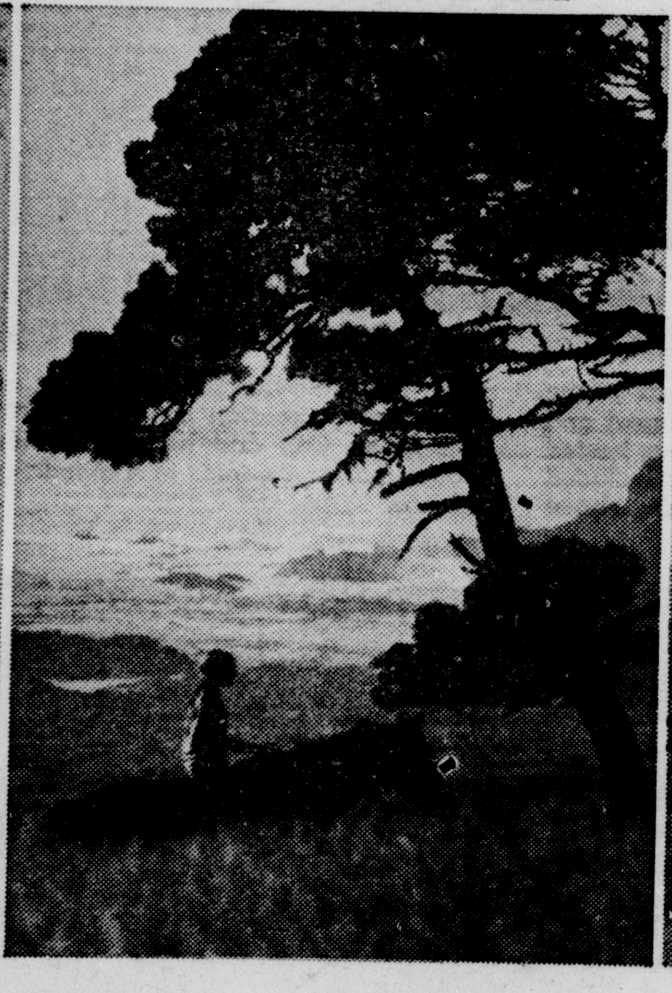
The Sea Ranch on the Sonoma Coast

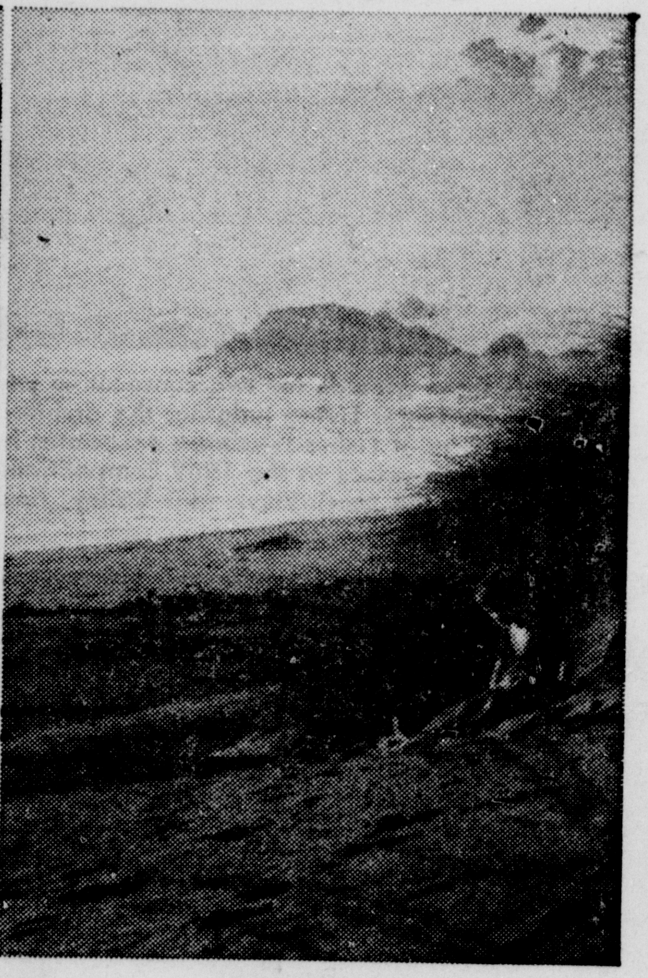
gives you a choice of three different worlds.

The forest.

The meadow.



The beach.



Where would you like your country homesite? . . . At beachside, near the sound of the surf? . . . On a grassy meadow, with wildflowers beating a path to your door? . . . Or sheltered on a gentle slope in a forest of redwoods and pines?

The Sea Ranch gives you a choice of all three, all within one development only 2½ hours from San Francisco.

Just because you choose one type of site here, though, does not mean that you have to forego the pleasures of the others. Nearly half The Sea Ranch land—including beaches, headlands and much of the meadow—is reserved for the recreational use of all who live here. You have free access to these areas. Thus, you can saddle up for a ride in the woods, picnic on the beach, hike the meadows, anytime the spirit moves you.

Prices for homesites at The Sea Ranch begin at $7,500. To find out more about this spectacular country home colony on the Sonoma Coast, send for our free brochure and more information. Simply call (415) 391-4002 in San Francisco or mail the coupon below.

New Books For The Juniors

Somewhat belatedly, publishers have realized that young readers in the sub-teens and early-teens are capable of absorbing books of serious subject matter, intent and tone. For instance:

"Beyond Diplomacy" (Parents Magazine Press, $4.50) by writer and political science teacher Richard J. Walton deals with a topic that youngsters 12 and older formerly would have encountered only in a textbook or not at all.

Without pulling punches, Walton reviews a record neglected by many popular histories of U.S. military interventions in foreign countries — in Mexico, in Cuba, in the Philippines, in China, in the Caribbean, in Lebanon. The book stops short of the most controversial of all our military ventures, Vietnam. But young readers will be able to regard it with a better understanding of how we came to be involved after reading "Beyond Diplomacy."

It isn't always nice to Uncle Sam. But then, today's youth has shown an impatience with anything less then the total truth.

"Students in Revolt" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95) by Janet Harris, Long Island University teacher and long-time civil rights worker, and other contributors takes up a continuing chapter in our contemporary history that these young people are writing themselves. It is a sympathetic look at youthful unrest that sees a single thread — the quest for student power — running through all the various demonstrations and actions. Frustration is the key word. And the book spells it out.

"The Most Native of Sons" (Doubleday, $3.95) is a superior biography of Richard Wright by another major black writer, John A. Williams. It is a well-told story of triumph over the pressures that plague all black people — even the creative ones. It should lead to increased appreciation of Wright's great gifts. And to a tardy awareness of just how much society has wasted in ignoring the potential of an entire race. Williams makes these points without equivocation.

"Slavery in America" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95) by Robert Liston is part of the Of Black America Series, and is a history of America's most shameful institution. No attempt is made to make a pretty story of the practice by which men regarded and treated other human beings as so much livestock. Liston has researched deeply and has come up with shocking information. So monstrous were slavery's evil consequences, Liston notes, that black people still today are handicapped by its lingering repercussions. Liston turns a strongly worded spotlight on a subject generally glossed over by the school texts.

"Life in traditional Vietnam is rural and harmonious," begins the introduction to "The Toad is the Emperor's Uncle" (Doubleday, $3.95). It's a beginning that is enough to make one weep. The book, however, is a delightful and colorful retelling of old Indo-Chinese fables by Vo-Dinh, French-schooled Vietnamese-born artist now living in Pennsylvania. Vo-Dinh narrates in a warm style filled with child-appeal and has done his own illustrations that are stronger, darker than the usual delicate art of the Orient. Belatedly, Americans have learned that the Orient has produced other proud and cultured people besides the Japanese and the Chinese. Our old notions of superiority have been exploded. Best that the new generation learn that lesson early.

There was a time when sports-writing ranked as one of the "glamor" occupations, a career to which tens of thousands of small boys aspired, hopeful that some day they might mix and mingle with the fabled of the athletic world. Today it has somewhat less appeal for fewer youngsters. But it still remains an interesting field of endeavor as Robert Lipsyte of the New York Times demonstrates in his "Assignment: Sports" (Harper Row, $3.95). It is a panorama of Lipsyte's "beat" from the 1968 Olympics in Mexico City to baseball's spring training camp and Arnold Palmer on the golf course. Young sports "addicts" will enjoy this opportunity to "see" the greats of the games through the eyes of a perceptive and enthusiastic professional.

Literary "heroes," except for a few of the more adventurous like Jack London and Mark Twain, have been pretty much ignored as subjects of biographies for junior. Richard O'Connor moves into that void with his "John Steinbeck" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95), telling of the life, and the work and the beliefs of an American writer genuinely concerned and greatly gifted. It is nice to see a book about a modern literary figure, and O'Connor has performed his project with the excellence and sensitivity his subject merits.

"In the Wilds of Africa" (Four Winds, $3.95) by Robert Halmi is an exceptional book, despite the absence of color in the photographs. Halmi, a veteran of the safari and a network television director and cameraman, takes up the more interesting animals of the Dark Continent, one by one, and reveals some surprising and interesting facts about each. Some good animal photographs supplement his entertaining and enlightening text.

The Important Role Of Play During Childhood

THE COMPLETE BOOK OF CHILDREN'S PLAY by Ruth E. Hartley and Robert M. Goldenson; Apollo Editions, 484 pages, paperback, $3.95. Reviewed by Maxine Keown.

These two psychologists and guidance specialists first collaborated on this scholarly work about the important and often overlooked role of play in a child's development in the late 1950s. It was subsequently updated and revised, and this is the softcover version of that more recent edition.

The book has been much used and much praised as a guide for parents in providing their children with the most rewarding play tools and experiences.

From the baby in the crib to the older hobbyist and pet-owner, the many varying aspects of play are covered.

And despite the professional backgrounds of the co-authors, the book is entirely intelligible to the layman and filled with practical, every-day advice and explanations.

"The best play materials are often those we do not buy at all, but collect — beautiful junk," we are told, for instance, in an early chapter.

On The Stereo Scene

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—RCA is selling a recording of Shostakovich's 13th symphony on the allegation that it is a "symphony of protest" by a composer angry at the way things are in the Soviet Union.

Maybe so. It has had only three performances in Russia. It is a setting of poems by the eminent poet, Yevtushenko, one of which may have been offensive to Soviet authorities.

On the other hand, it is no less likely that the Russians found it too dull to perform often or to record. American performances rights were acquired by the Philadelphia Orchestra in the usual way.

And the Philadelphians have recorded it, with Eugene Ormandy conducting, with Tom Krause, the Finnish baritone, as soloist and with a Philadelphia male chorus. To speak softly, it is neither an exciting nor memorable symphony. The composer is using his established devices (3162).

Most provocative of the first Beethoven piano music recordings of this Beethoven's 200th birthday year is by Glenn Gould. As virtuoso he played the "Moonlight," "Appassionata" and "Pathetique." As musicologist he comments on them on the back of the album. His admiration for Beethoven has reservations and his opinion of the "Appassionata" is a very low one. The "Pathetique" he admires within limits and the "Moonlight" is for him a "masterpiece." Virtuosos probably are well advised to keep their fingers busy and their mouths shut. Perhaps unjustly the reader-listener may well think the opinions are reflected in the playing (Columbia-7413).

It was inevitable that Beethoven's first known compositions would be recorded again, and here they are—the three "Elector" sonatas played by Jorg Demus and eight variations and a sonata for piano duet played by Demus and Norman Shetler. The composer was around 11 years old. The music has no suggestion of what he was to become (Deutsche-Grammophon 139448).

Much more interesting than very early Beethoven is fairly late Vaughan Williams. It is his two-piano concerto—two pianos to carry percussive weight over the accompanying orchestra. The recording was made by Vitja Vronsky and Victor Babin with the London Philharmonic, Sir Adrian Boult conducting, and also included is Boult's effective interpretation of Vaughan Williams' eighth symphony (Angel-36625).

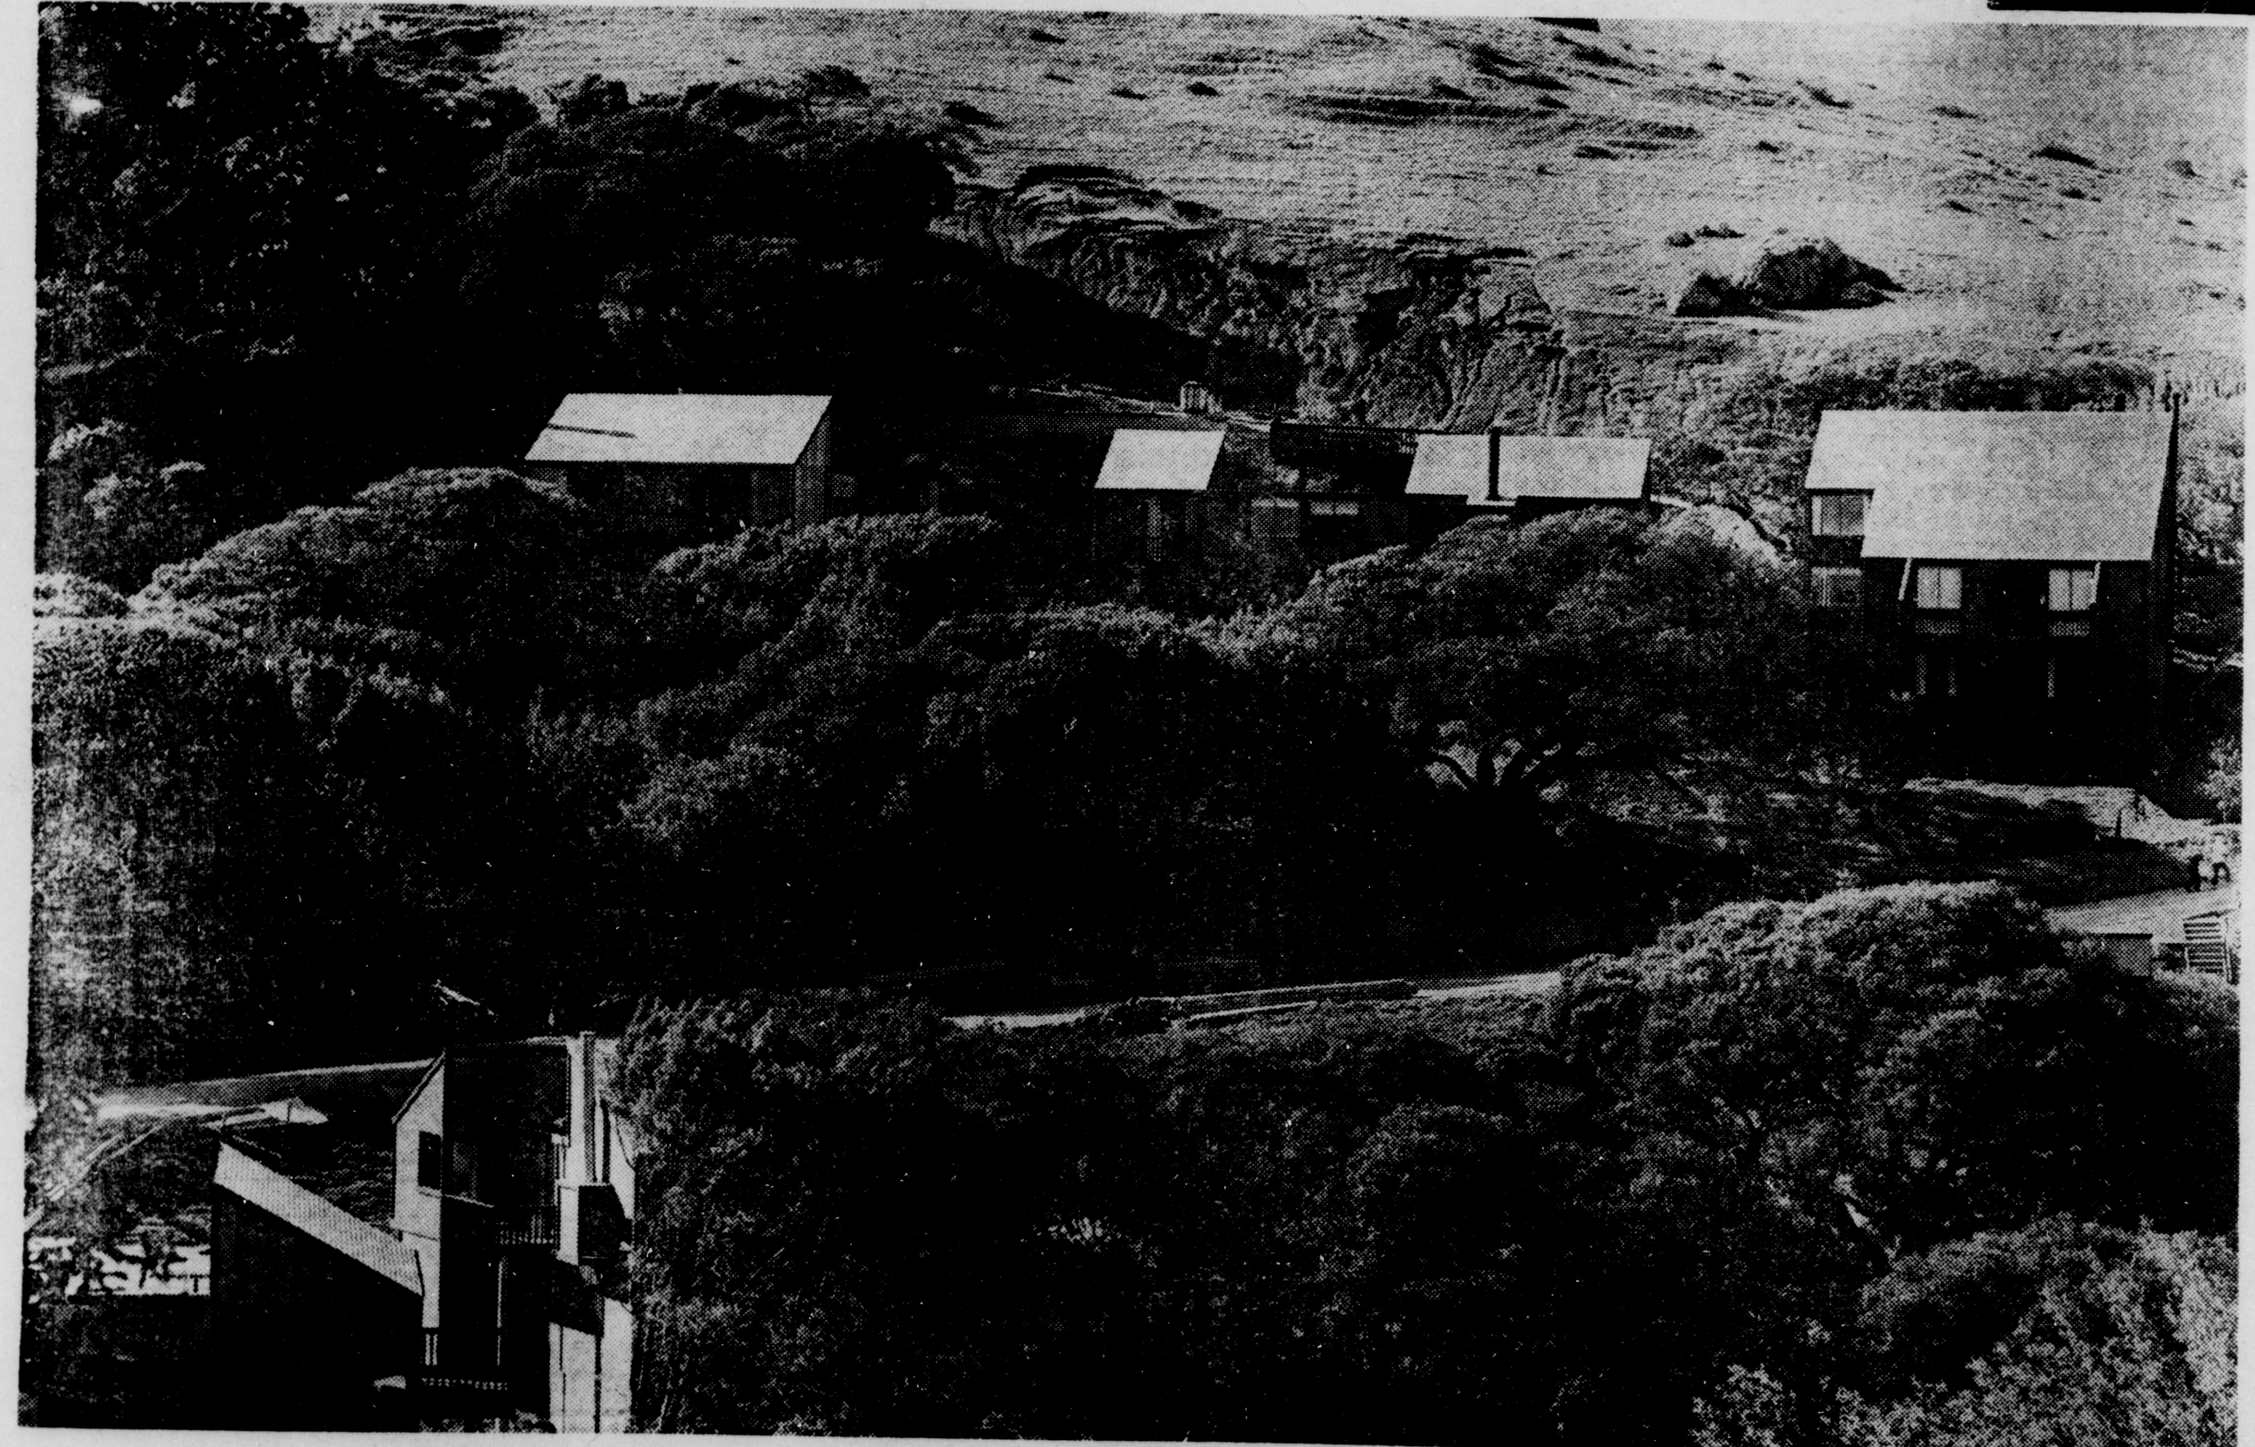
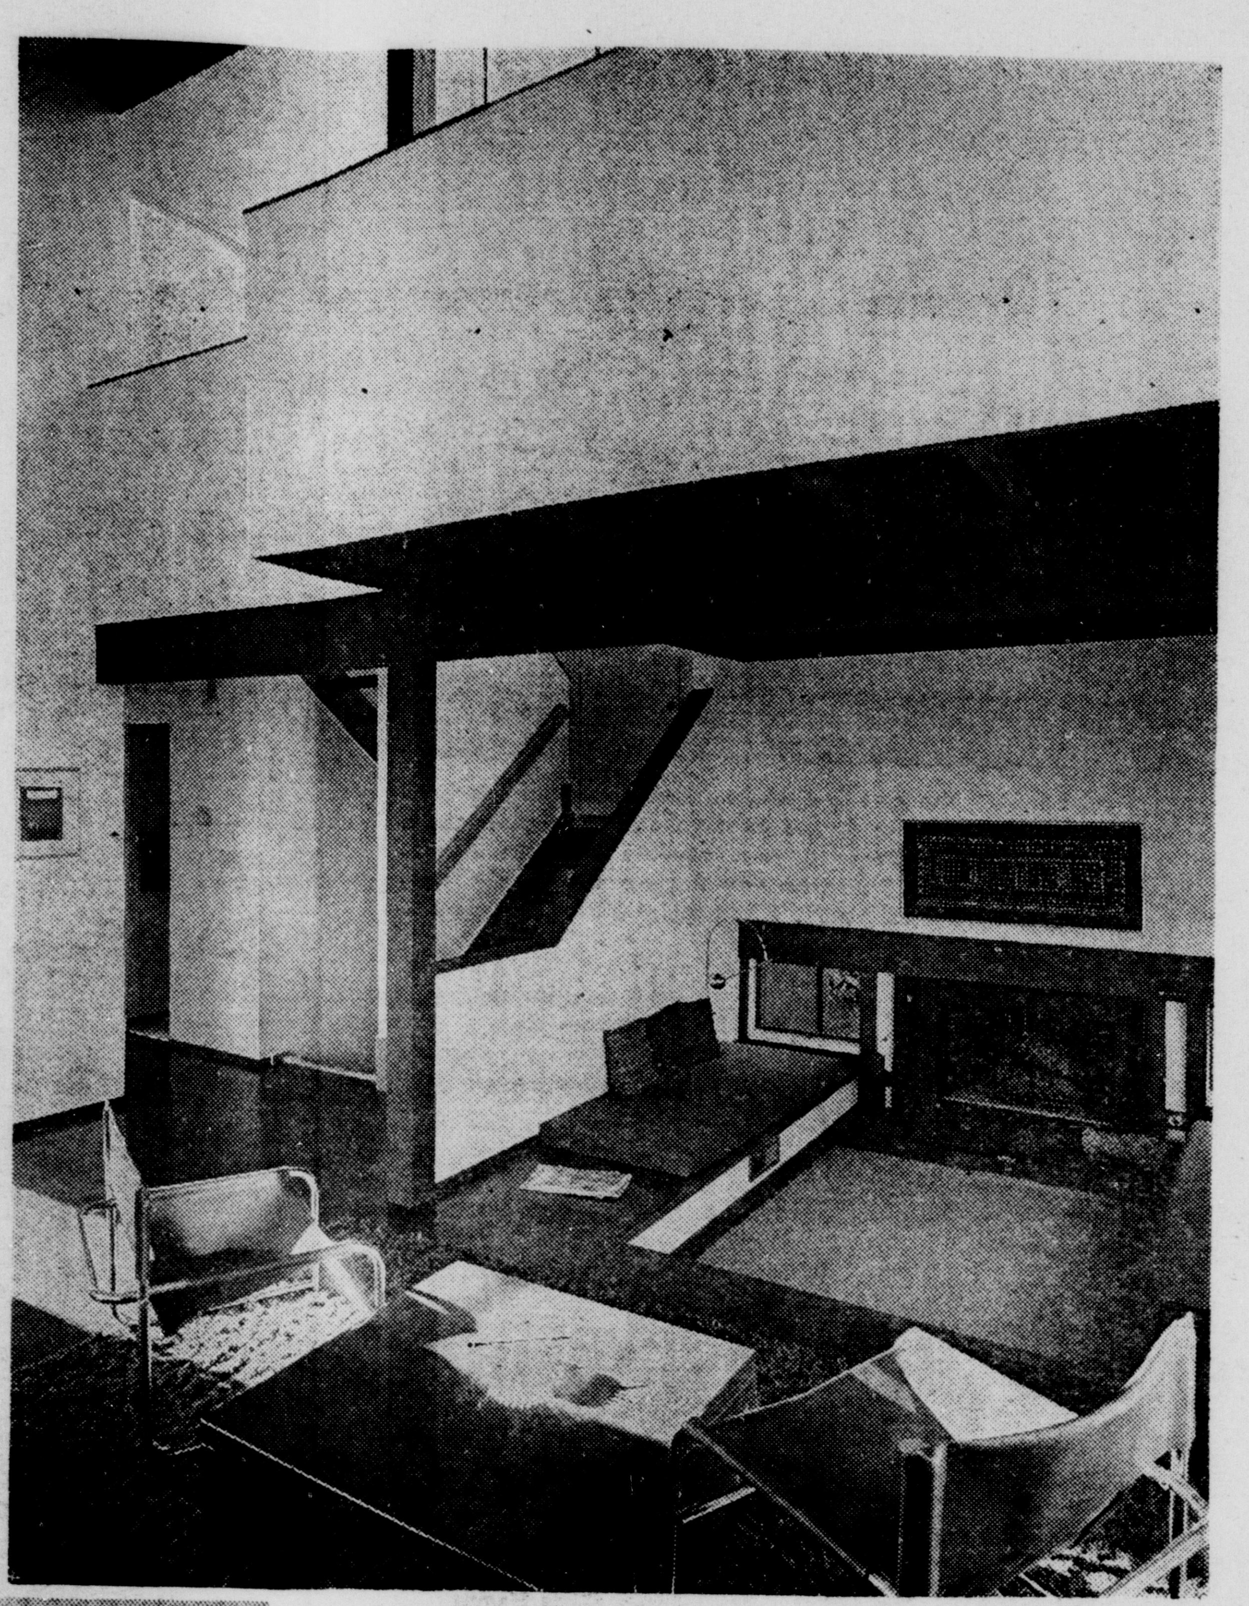
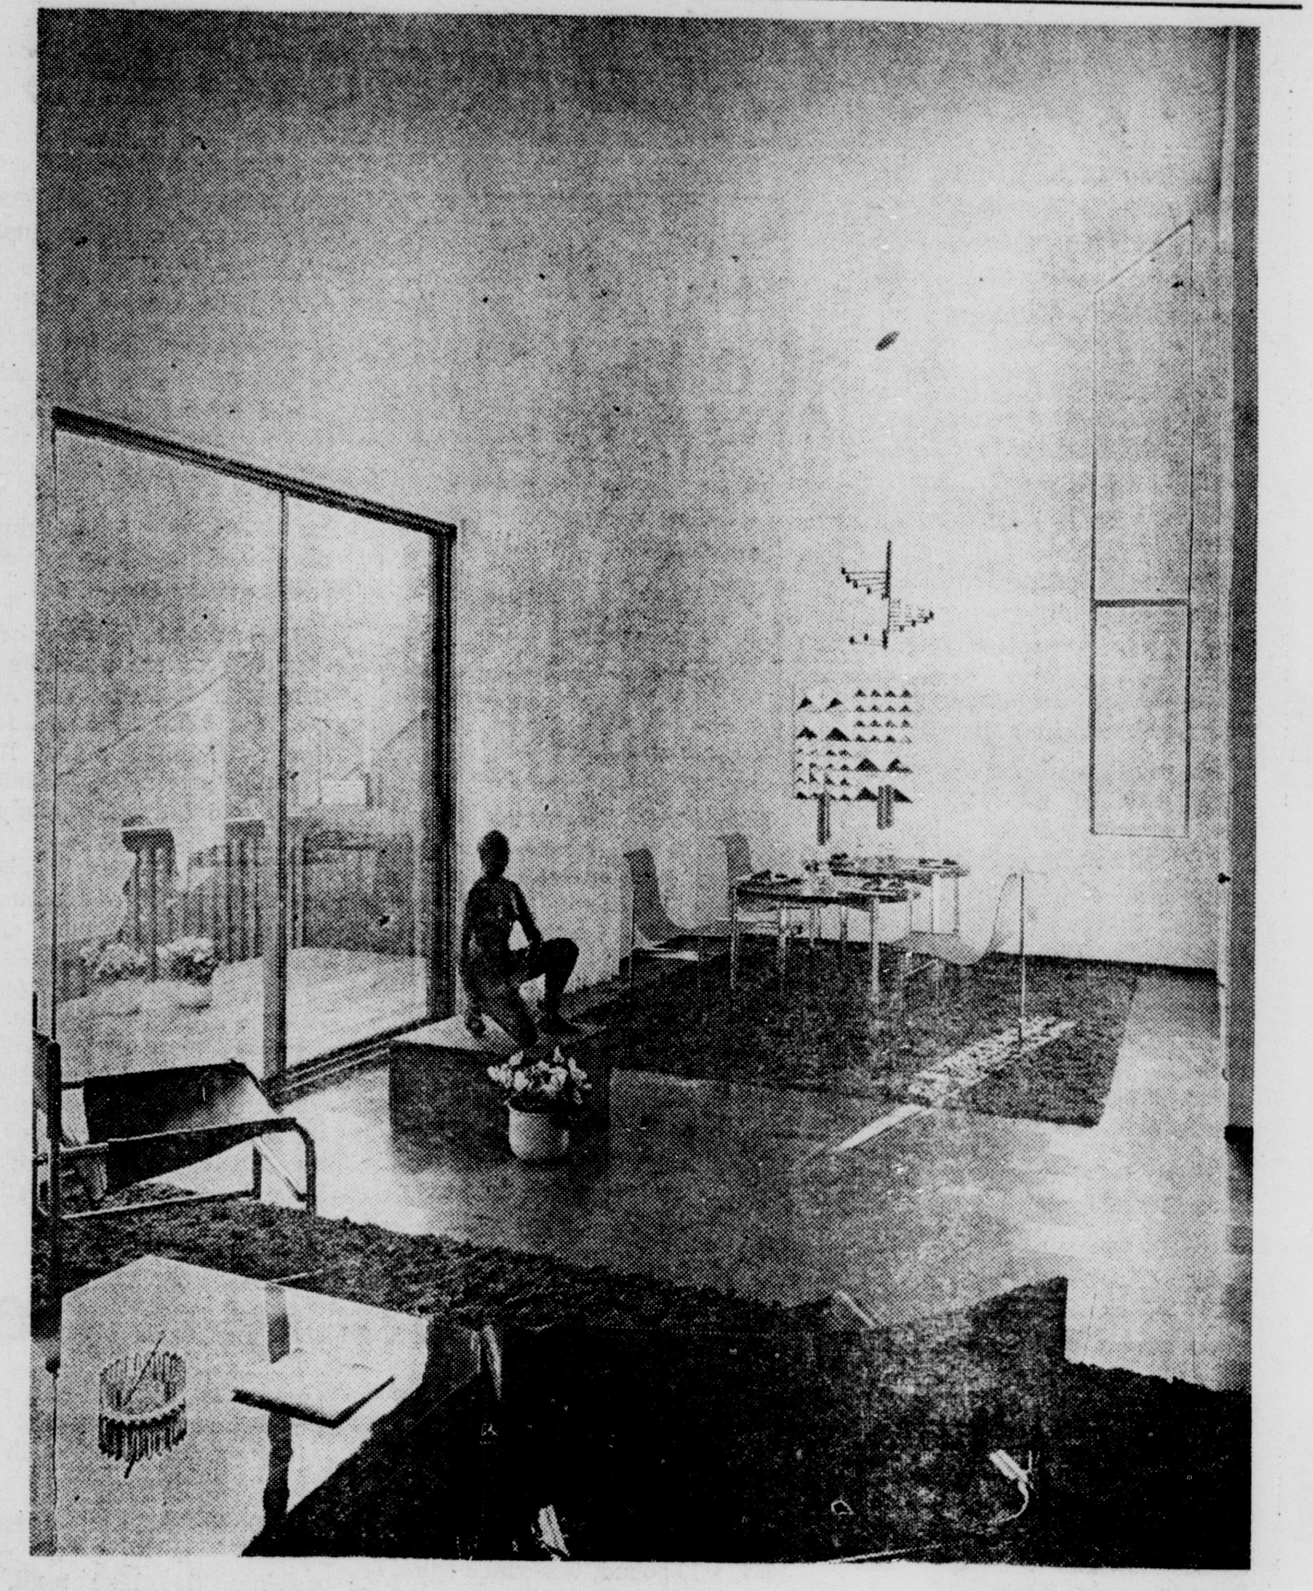
AFTER CAPTURING three awards for two consecutive years in the prestigious Homes for Better Living judging, the architectural and planning consultant firm of Fisher-Friedman Associates has bested its own record with four prizes in the 1969 competition. Included are a merit award for the MarinView, Mill Valley, house above built for Allan-Marin Co., a merit award for the Mariner Square apartment-recreation complex in Newport Beach constructed for the Irvine Co., and honorable mention for Ballena Bay town-house-marina complex in Alameda and a custom-built residence in Alamo.



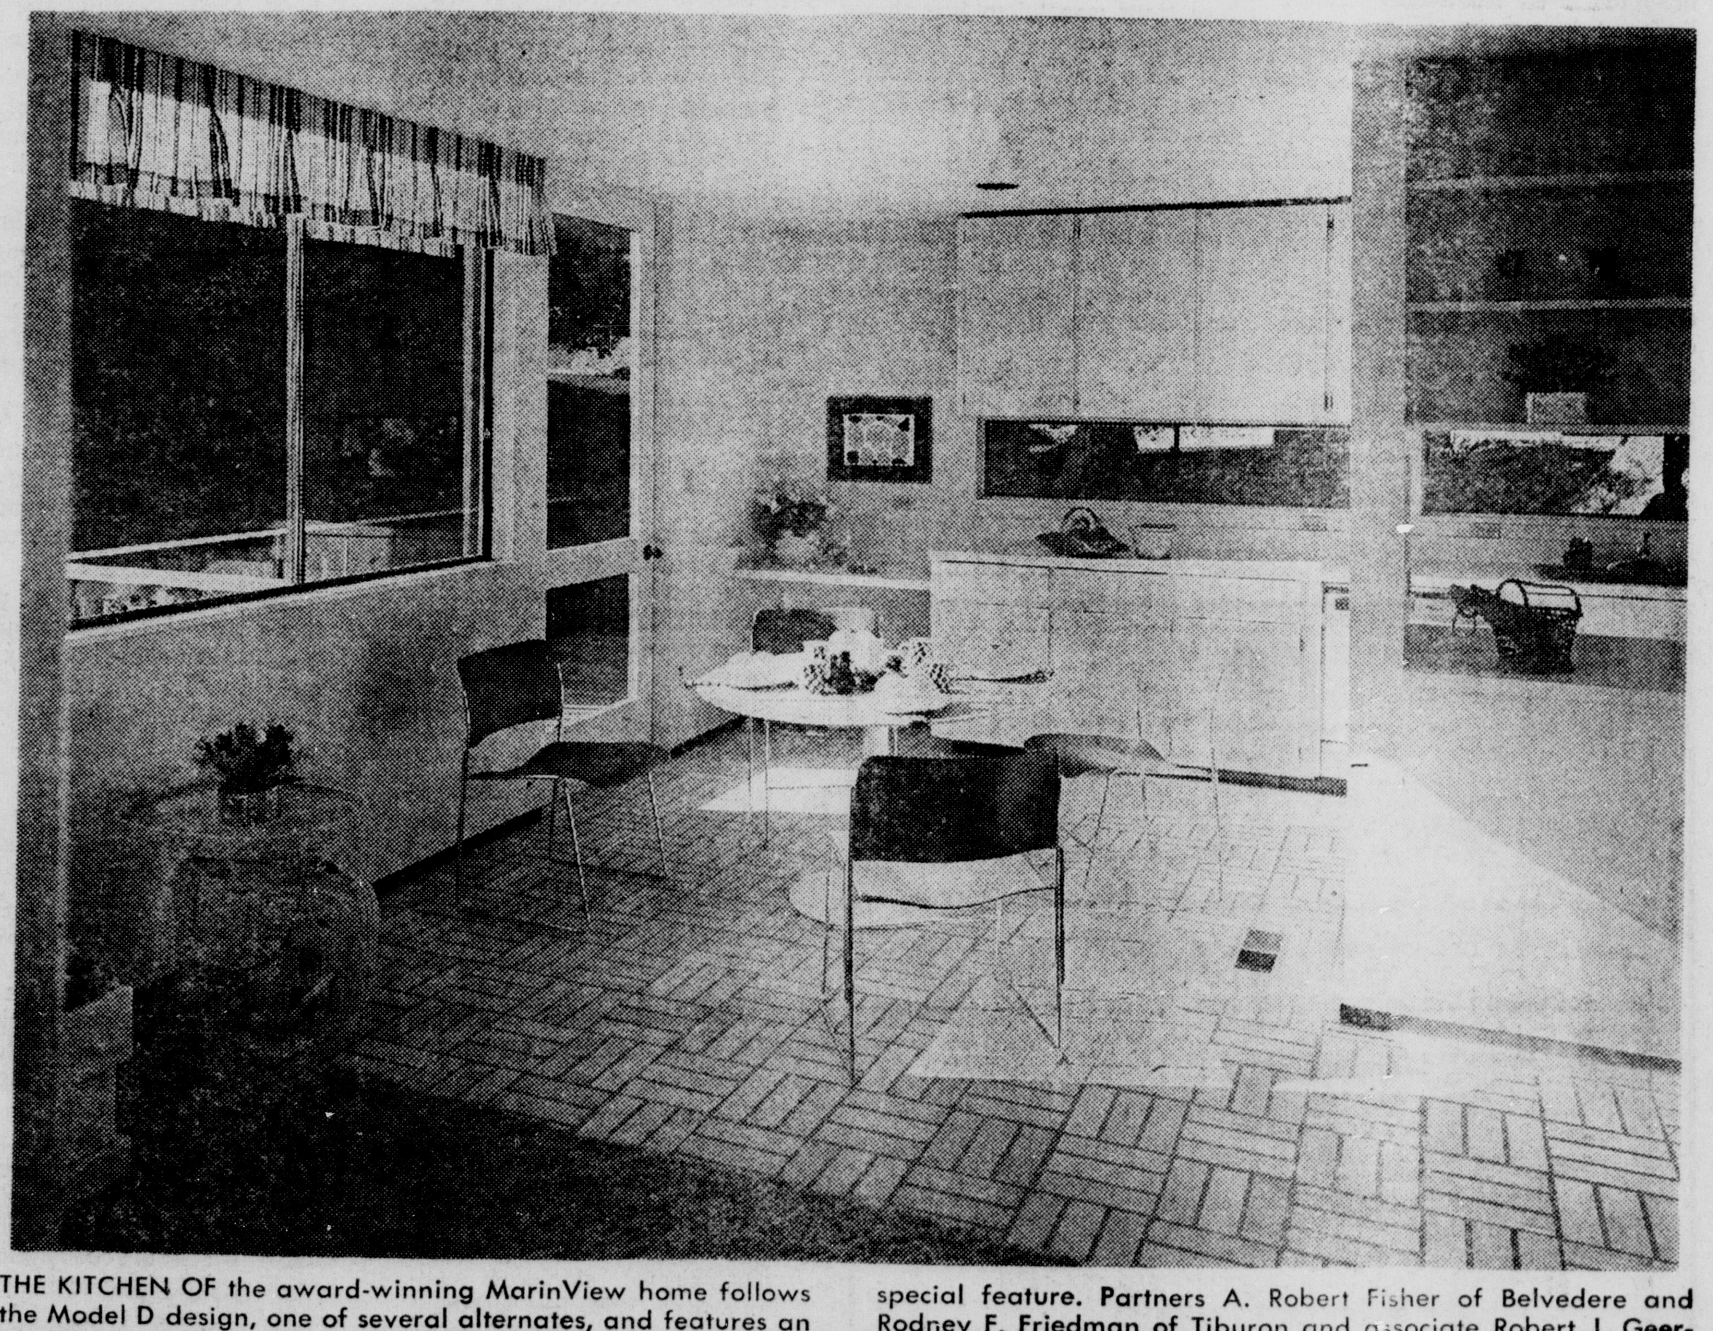




ABOVE, the Model D plan for MarinView which won for its architects Fisher-Friedman Associates of San Francisco a Homes for Better Living merit award includes a sunken fireside nook off the living room that snuggles beneath the adult retreat of the master bedroom. At upper right, the dining room comes with bronze anodized aluminum sliding doors that lead to the sundeck. MarinView is a 12-million-dollar, 320-home development being built in the Mill Valley hills.

Marin Living

AT LEFT, the MarinView home recognized for excellence by Homes for Better Living judges is in the extreme right of the photograph, and appears to blend in nicely with the sloping terrain and trees that surround the site. Builders Resources Corp. of Los Angeles has joined with Allan-Marin Co. of Mill Valley in the building of the new community.



THE KITCHEN OF the award-winning MarinView home follows the Model D design, one of several alternates, and features an outdoor breakfast area to the left of the glass door. Well-detailed cabinetry with a novel window treatment is another special feature. Partners A. Robert Fisher of Belvedere and Rodney F. Friedman of Tiburon and associate Robert J. Saga Of Marin's Miwok Indians Had A Sad Conclusion

Once Proud People Vanished From Region They Had Ruled

ed their Indian help kindly. But others were little more than slavemasters.

One of the better employers was Capt. William Richardson of the Rancho Saucelito. His son, Steve, said of his father's hands:

"It is well-known they enjoyed good health. They lived in an equable climate, had no booze to break down their health prematurely, and the habit to taking daily sweats with the accompanying plunge into cold water was conducive to good health. The blood was pure.

"THEY NEVER had a toothache. Probably this was due to their simple diet, without any element that would produce acidity. I never knew an Indian with a missing tooth unless he lost it by accident . . .

"They retained their eyesight, unimpaired, to a great age. I am sure I never saw a short-sighted Indian, and still less one who was noticeably deaf . . . "

Alas, the fate of most Indians in Marin was far less happy. An epidemic of smallpox that started at Fort Ross and swept through Sonoma and Marin took a heavy toll of their population.

AND WITH California now a state and Marin the 27th of the original counties, it was definitely white man's country.

The once plentiful game had been slaughtered by market hunters for hides and tallow. The Indians were forced to subsist on clams and fish, so that many lived along the shores of Tomales Bay.

A few remained in the Nicasio vicinity, among them Jose Caleistro, a chief and said to be the last of the full-blooded Indians of Marin.

There is a sad commentary that bespeaks the final fate of Marin's once thriving Indian populace in the "History of Marin County" published in 1880 by Alley, Bowen & Co. It states:

"THE NICASIO Indians were at once time a very powerful tribe numbering many thousands and filling the whole valley, but they have vanished before the silent forces of civilization . . . Dire contagion stalked through the land and claimed many tithings for the charnel house of death, and later the accursed 'firewater' of the white man overcame and destroyed the sons (of the once proud Indians), while the souls and bodies of the daughters were sold in prostitution . . .

"Thus have their ranks been decimated until scarcely a score can be mustered, and the once populous village contains only eight wigwams now.

"What few remain of the tribe live upon a tract of about 30 acres, situated about two miles east of Nicasio in a lovely valley which was purchased by Jose Caleistro, their last chief, of William J. Miller, several years ago, as a home for the remnants of his people. The county appropriates $40 a month for their support which together with the pittance of wages they earn and the game they kill, affords them a meager sustenance.

"THERE ARE five who are very aged, indeed — in fact, so old that nothing can be obtained that would establish the dates of their births, and they are almost helpless.

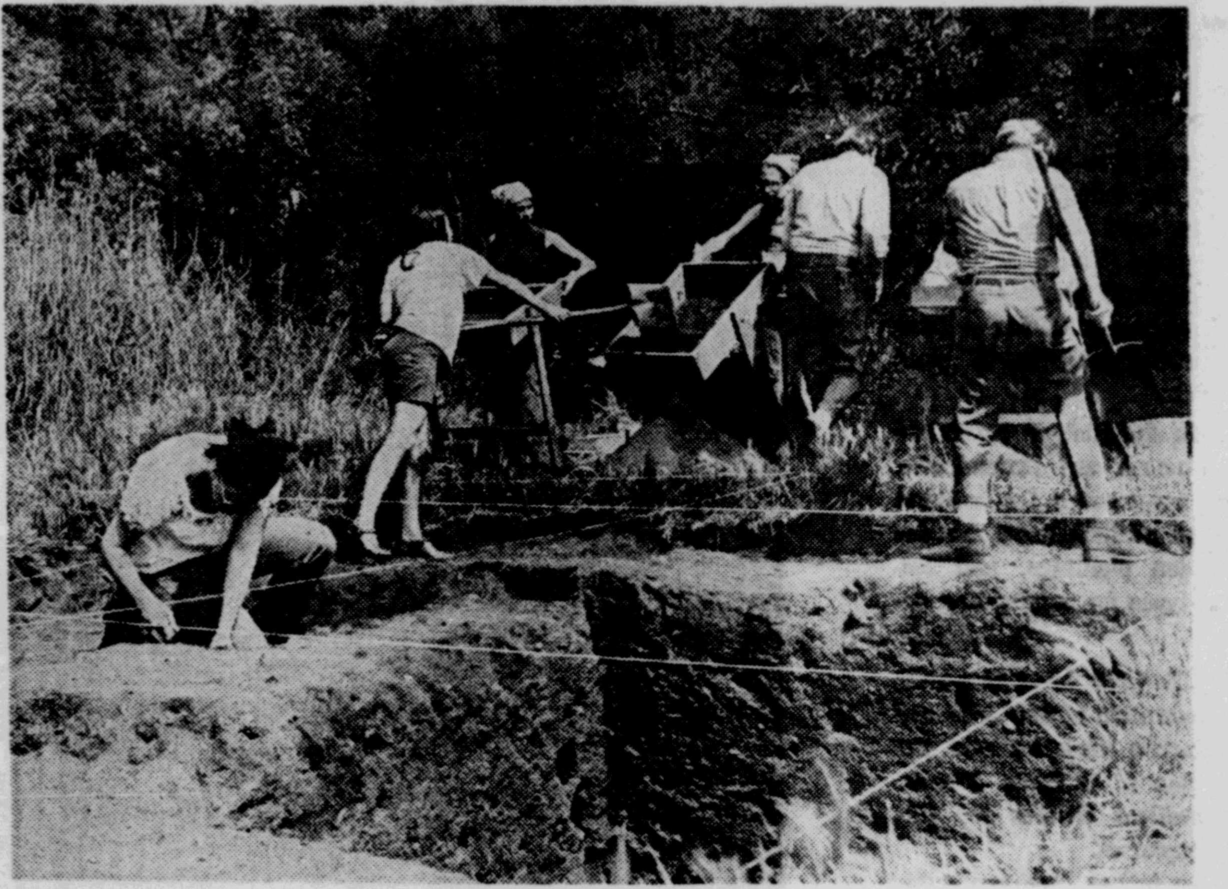
"They are patiently waiting for death to come and take them to their people who have gone before them, long ago, to the happy hunting grounds."

It is a sad ending to a saga in which the white man once again covered himself with shame, rather than with glory.

AND IT BEHOOVES us all when we sometimes feel superior to these primitive aborigines who are among us no more to stop and wonder:

Are fume-spewing automobiles really superior to fleet Indian ponies? Are processed and re-processed foodstuffs really better for us than the simple fare of the Indians? Is the hectic pace we set for our daily lives really more fulfilling than the leisurely life lived by the Miwoks?

Might we not still learn some lessons from these humble people who lived in harmony rather than hostility with nature?



ARCHAEOLOGICAL DIGGINGS such as this one being conducted by San Francisco State College students at Marinwood have unearthed artifacts that have contributed to our knowledge of the Coast Miwoks and their way of life. Some 500 Indian mounds have been recorded in Marin County. (Independent-Journal photo)

ARTIFACTS unearthed from Indian mounds, such as this spearhead held by Kate Partride, have told us much about Marin's Indians.

Home Of Bristlecones

You can go back more than 4,000 years by traveling to the top of the White Mountains bordering the Owens Valley on the eastern side of the Sierra Nevada.

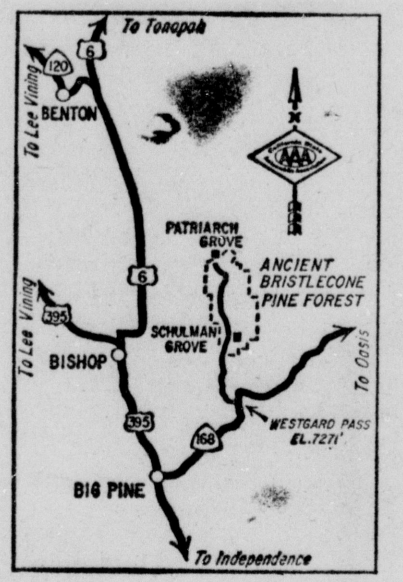
Here the bristlecone pine lives in a remote, forbidding land that rises almost 12,000 feet, seemingly a dead mass of wind-scoured trunks and twisted limbs.

FOR ALL OF their vast age these bleakly tan, gray, reddish and white trees are stunted giants which were growing 1,000 years before the oldest giant redwood broke from the soil.

As you travel up Westgard Pass, east of Big Pine, look west for a view of the Palisades with their sharp peaks towering above their glaciers.

Tilted layers of bedrock are exposed by the streams that flow down from White Mountain as the road winds through impressive narrow canyons. This rock is several million years older than the granite of the Sierra Nevada.

FROM THE turnoff at Westgard Pass the pinyon-juniper forest is soon replaced by timberline trees, limber pine and bristlecone mixed. As you travel higher, only the bristlecone survives.



THIS MAP directs the motorist to the home of the rare and ancient bristlecone pine, the oldest of them, Methuselah, 4,600 years.

All the immensity of the Sierra Nevada can be admired as the road climbs higher. Superlative views of this massive block of granite stretch north and south and you can see 12 of the 14 highest peaks in California.

At 10,000 feet is the Schulman Grove area named after the determiner of the trees' great age, Dr. Edmund Schulman. Here atop the White Mountains he discovered the oldest tree of all, 4,600-year-old Methuselah.

TWO TRAILS lead to the oldest trees with a half-mile hike over easy trail to Pine Alpha, the first 4,000-year-old tree which Schulman dated. It's a two-mile hike along Methuselah Walk and the other many ancients.

The land of the bristlecone has no streams and almost no underbrush, and most of the trees in the forest are less than 30 feet tall, although some may be as much as 50 feet high.

If you look down you will find you are stepping on small plants whose colors blend in well with the rock. Most are in bloom during July and August with their blooms of lavenders, silvers, pale yellows, gray greens, tan, pinks, rusts and dull reds.

CENTURIES OLD, the gnarled and twisted forms of the bristlecone pines that cling to the eastern slopes of the Sierra Nevada offer visitors to that remote area a never-to-be-forgotten sight. Botanists say they predated the redwoods by a thousand years. (California State Automobile Association photo)

ALWAYS GROWING slowly, the bristlecone in dry years just endure their harsh gravelly soil, adding only a microscopic ring, perhaps only adding an inch of growth in 100 years.

Further up the mountain, beyond Schulman Grove, is the Patriach, with a circumference of 36 feet eight inches and only 1,500 years old. Unusual in this area are the "pickaback" trees that grow not up but sideways, adding circumference but not height.

Canada's Yukon Territory Is Heaven To The Fisherman

Are you looking for a fishing spot where you can have a lake or stream to yourself?

Where you won't need to brag about the one that got away, because the ones you catch are bragging size? Where the catch limit works out to 10 fish an hour in six hours of fishing?

And where the license fee for visitors is less than you'd expect to pay for a resident license?

Cast your line in Canada's Yukon Territory.

TUCKED UP in the northwest corner of Canada, right next door to Alaska, the Yukon offers over 200,000 square miles of mountain wilderness and some of the finest fresh water fishing found anywhere.

You can camp free in a government campground or pick your own spot for total privacy. If you're not the camping type, you can stay in a lodge, motel or hotel.

Good to excellent fishing can be found within a few minutes' drive of even the largest city. In 1968, a 19-pound, two-ounce rainbow trout was taken just three miles from Whitehorse, the capital city. Arctic grayling are taken regularly inside the city's boundaries.

OR PERHAPS you really want to get away from it all. Then charter a float plane to take you into one of dozens of remote lakes where it's possible to catch your limit on a few casts.

Several areas have licensed fishing guides who will take you out after the lunkers. Some of them go as far as to guarantee you fish or you don't pay the fee, they're so sure of a catch. The guides will supply their services, along with boat, motor and fishing gear.

Now, about those catch limits:

IN ONE DAY you can haul in 20 northern pike, 10 Arctic grayling, five lake trout, five dolly varden, five kokanee, five rainbow trout, two steelhead and two in the aggregate of King or Coho salmon. Grayling and trout under eight inches must be returned to the water.

Yukon has no closed season on sports fishing and there are no catch limits on whitefish, burbot (ling cod), inconnu (shee fish) or cisco (fresh water herring).

Most popular species, and the most abundant, are the lake trout, Arctic grayling and northern pike.

YUKON FISH are particularly fine eating because of their glacier-fed, blue-water environment. They come in all sizes and a collossal lake trout, taken upstream from the Carcross Bridge, weighed 87 pounds and was five feet, two inches long.

In the lakes which are more easily accessible, lake trout of five to 10 pounds are common and larger ones, up to 30 pounds, are frequently taken. The larger ones are usually caught by anglers fishing from a boat. Twenty to 30-pound lakers are common in the more remote lakes.

Lake trout seem to prefer large bait. It's not unusual to take two pounders on a six to 10 inch spoon. Fresh bait includes frozen smelt, or herring, from a supermarket, or strips of fresh fish.

NEARLY ALL streams crossed by the Alaska Highway and other main roads in the Yukon will yield catches of Arctic grayling, even to inexperienced fishermen.

Many of these streams also support one or more species of trout and visitors often stop at such streams for an on-the-spot fresh fish barbecue.

Grayling, kokanee and members of the trout family are taken on flies, small spinners or spoons. This also applies to whitefish, which are becoming increasingly popular with fly and light tackle fishermen.

THE GENEROUS limit of 20 northern pike is easily filled waters frequented by these fish. The angler's bag often has more than one pike approaching four feet in length.

On top of all this, anglers fishing in the Yukon are given a bonus in unsurpassed mountain scenery, clean waters and clear, invigorating atmosphere, which increases the appetite and makes those freshly-caught fish taste even better.

For more information on fishing Canada's Yukon Territory, contact the Department of Travel and Information, Box 2703, Whitehorse, Yukon.

DON'T CALL IT THE 'SIERRAS'

"I'm off to the High Sierras."

This incorrect reference to the Shining Range, the Snowy Mountain, the Range of Light, is one that is uttered by people who think primarily of its many majestic peaks and spires and pinnacles and domes.

The Sierra Nevada, according to the National Automobile Club, is a single mountain with all its components joined at the foot, a huge block of stone with a total area greater than that of Rhode Island.

Measuring 400 miles in length and 40 to 60 miles in width, the scenic mountain has eight national forests, three national parks, one national monument and five wilderness areas within its reaches.

Of the awe-inspiring peaks, 500 tower more than 12,000 feet in the air. Among the 12 that display glaciered summits over 14,000 feet is Mount Whitney, the second highest point in the United States.

Where Bat Is Respected

Bats, often disdained and even feared, are a popular tourist attraction at Carlsbad Caverns National Park in New Mexico.

In immense numbers, the bats emerge from the cave each summer evening, spiral upwards and then stream southward to separate into flocks for night foraging.

The return to the cave is made at dawn when they dive into the entrance and fly directly to what is known as the Bat Cave to spend the day, roosting by hanging downwards from the walls or ceilings in dense clusters.

During the winter most of the bats leave the caverns and migrate to warmer regions.

Guides tell visitors that although bats have long been maligned in folklore and superstition, "the ones here are not only harmless, but beneficial. They destroy harmful insects and produce guano, a valuable fertilizer."

The 'Cone Family' Will Serve You Well

THERE ARE coniferous plants to fit almost every landscape need. In fact, that can be said of the juniper family alone. Shown here in the foreground is a planting of the groundcover-type Emerald Spreader with its green branchlets providing a feathery appearance. In the background is the Table Top Blue Juniper, a medium-grower excellent as a showpiece with its semi-spreading, flat-top silvery-blue branches. Junipers offer an array of forms, textures and colors as well as sizes.

For real 12-months-of-the-year beauty, the foliage of evergreen conifers can't be beat. Marin nurserymen have coniferous (cone-bearing) plants to fit every landscape situation — from low-growing junipers to giant redwoods.

Within the juniper classification there are groundcover types, low-growers for borders, excellent medium-sized ones for foundation plantings, and columnar-types for outstanding accents.

AT GROUND level the blue-gray coloration of San Jose and Bar Harbor varieties and the silver-blue of Wilton's Juniper are excellent choices for filling-in expanses.

A step higher, Andorra Juniper and compact Golden Pfitzer Juniper are self-shaping and spreading. The latter's coloration is a highlight and Andorra's blue-gray foliage takes on a handsome plum color in colder months.

Gold Coast Juniper, which has chartreuse shadings to crisp green foliage, is a newer introduction with great promise.

IT'S HARD TO pass up the popular Pfitzer Juniper with its bluish-green color and spreading fine branches. This one is a foundation planting favorite and enjoys great use in local landscapes.

Blue Vase and Pathfinder are the names of two upright-growing junipers that are exciting accents in the garden. From a distance or up close, these take everyone's fancy. Your nurseryman will have these or similar varieties for you to use.

Yews are noted for the dark green of their needles. They are adaptable and hardy, even in partial shade. Erect-growers, in dense upright columns, yews are lovely in the ground or in large tubs. They are ideal in formal settings.

A FEW MORE of the many conifer cousins include the many pines, arborvitae, cedar, cypress and spruce.

Members of the "cone family" are noted not only for their beauty, but their ability to survive under severe conditions. For Marinites, this indicates the various conifers require little attention.

Gift Ideas For Gardening Dads

Father's Day is June 21, and throughout Marin many gardening dads will be gifted, with a variety of prized plants, garden gadgets and books.

For the family whose dad is a green thumber, Father's Day shopping is simplified. Anything that nurtures his horticultural instincts will be appreciated and cherished.

Nurserymen report one of the "most wanted" gift items today is a tubbed dwarf citrus. Dwarf citrus in a redwood tub provides year-'round enjoyment — luxuriant foliage, fragrant blossoms and colorful and tasty fruit.

LOCAL NURSERIES have the citrus varieties best for our area and an assortment of containers into which your choice may be planted.

Some nurserymen will have larger-sized specimens available, and chances are these will already be adorned with fruit.

Perhaps "Pop" wouldn't pamper himself by buying his very own fertilizer spreader with which to feed his lawn, but you can imagine his delight on Father's Day when he receives his own. A suggestion would be for a thoughtful offspring to volunteer to feed the lawn for Father; but he will probably want to try out the new spreader for himself — first!

MANY NURSERIES have varieties of plant materials — such as Wax Leaf Privet, Eugenia, or Myrtus — trained into topiaries, globes or pyramids. Chances are if Dad is a regular visitors to the neighborhood nursery he has had his eye on one of these attractive specimens. These may be planted to dramatize an entryway or used as a focal point where their magnificence will show, or used as decorative pieces in tubs or large pots.

There's a pride of ownership that accompanies such unusual plants — as is the case with all living gifts.

Visit your nursery and investigate the Father's Day gift opportunities.

Besides a variety of blooming plant materials and foliage plants you'll find how-to gardening books, specialized garden equipment and a myriad of accessories which will add to the enjoyment of gardening for your Dad.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

Here is the Marin gardener's checklist for the coming week:

✓Grow your own corsages. Gardenias are available in containers at nurseries, and will give you not only exquisite white blooms but also a charming garden fragrance in coming summer evenings.

✓Cultivate your garden beds regularly to eliminate young weeds and to loosen soil compacted by watering.

✓Hurry to plant tuberous begonia seedlings and chrysanthemum plants.

✓Hydrangeas can be planted now in rich, well-drained soil and in filtered shade. The newer, low-growing hydrangeas are ideal for tubs or for planting beneath trees. Keep them well watered during the summer.

✓Don't hesitate to thin out fruit trees that are bearing too heavily. You will encourage larger, more perfect fruit by so doing.

✓There is still time to plant summer bedding plants, but do it now. In planting, be sure to turn the soil deeply enough to insure a free and easy root run.

✓Mulching, especially around shallow-rooted specimens such as camellias, azaleas and fuchsias, is the secret to freshness in the summer garden. Don't spread a paper-thin layer. Peat moss, leaf mold or the like can go on two inches thick, bark products even more thickly.

Before The Trip Must Come The Shots

The Travel Pages

By MURRAY J. BROWN

NEW YORK (UPI)—So you are all set for your first trip aboard. You have your passport and visas and confirmed transportation and hotel and other reservations.

Now all you have to do is wait for your departure date, grab your bags, kiss your relatives goodby, and take off.

Right?

Wrong!

When was the last time you were vaccinated against smallpox? If it was more than three years ago, you might have to be inoculated again. And, depending on your travel plans, it may be necessary to have other shots.

ALL AMERICANS traveling overseas, except in certain areas in the Western Hemisphere, are required to have proof of immunization against smallpox. And the vaccinations MUST be recorded in the official International Certificates of Vaccination and bear the authorized stamp of your local public health service.

True, there are some foreign countries where officials don't even look inside the special form approved by the World Health Organization (WHO). But there are others who check carefully and may refuse you admission if the health record is not properly executed and authenticated.

The U.S. Public Health Service also requires validated proof of such immunity from American citizens returning from foreign travel, with the exception of the specifically-exempt areas. Failure to provide such evidence could mean vaccination at the port of entry or surveillance up to 14 days, or both, or even detention for up to two weeks.

THE 16-PAGE health record can be obtained at U.S. Passport agency offices or from your travel agent and airlines and steamship companies. I keep mine stapled to my passport as a precaution against loss and to help speed clearance through control points.

Your travel agent or carrier should be able to advise you if other immunizations may be necessary. These, too, should be entered in the official certificate.

In some countries, inoculations against yellow fever and cholera are mandatory and you could be turned back or quarantined for up to two weeks. These immunizations also must be validated by your local health authority.

AMERICANS, WHO have visited or passed through countries where cholera, smallpox, typhus and other contagious diseases may be prevalent, face surveillance or detention for up to 14 days on return to the United States unless they have had the necessary inoculations.

Immunization against yellow fever, good for 10 years, can be only obtained at specified U.S. Public Health centers. Anti-cholera shots, valid for six months, and other required and recommended vaccinations may be administered by your own doctor.

For all international travel, the Public Health Service recommends protection against tetanus, diphtheria and poliomyelitis.

THE RECOMMENDATION for anti-typhoid shots was dropped last year for Americans visiting Europe and other developed areas. But there have been outbreaks of the disease, however, in a number of countries with high sanitary standards so you might want to take precautions anyway.

All inoculations should be obtained well in advance of departure, not only because of possible reactions but some require a series of injections spaced over several weeks. And the immunizations are not considered effective until after periods ranging from six to 10 days.

As an additional protection, take a medical checkup while you get your shots. If your doctor should prescribe medication, take an ample supply as well as the prescription in case of emergency.

SEE YOUR dentist, too, and, if you wear glasses, take an extra pair and the prescription just in case. A first aid kit also could come in handy.

Travelers with heart ailments, diabetes, hemophilia, allergies and other health problems should wear tags or bracelets detailing their medical history. Such information could prove invaluable in emergencies.

Tags and bracelets can be obtained by writing to the non-profit Medic-Alert Foundation International at Turlock, Calif. The Medic-Alert disc—there is a charge—also carries the telephone number of its headquarters where collect calls may be made day or night for additional information if the bearer is stricken suddenly.

FOR FURTHER peace of mind, there is Intermedic. There is probably nothing more frightening than to fall ill in some country where the language is different from your own.

Intermedic provides members with a directory listing almost 400 doctors, and their telephone numbers, in some 80 countries overseas who speak English. Participating physicians provide services day or night for stipulated fees—at this writing, no more than $8 for an office visit, $10 for the first house or hotel call, and $15 for an emergency night call.

Membership for one year is $5 for an individual and $9 for a family. Intermedic's headquarters is at 777 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y., 10017.

The Feminine Touch In Tokyo

Women now are inspecting luggage at Tokyo International Airport.

To overcome a labor shortage and add a touch of glamor to travel, customs officials put 11 women in uniform and assigned them to inspect the baggage of passengers from abroad.

The women inspectors formerly were detailed to search women travelers suspected of smuggling narcotics or other contraband in their clothing.

NOTES TO TRAVEL BY

Japan Air Lines reports that fears of monumental jams and confusion on the Expo '70 grounds at Osaka and nearby hotels have proven unfounded, and that there are still seats on week day flights and hotel accommodations available to tour groups and individuals . . . "World Travel Directory—1970," described as "the who's who of the travel industry," has been published by Robinson-Ingledue Travel Publications of 5850 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, 90028, and sells for $24 a copy.

Trans-World Airlines is offering a New York City Festival of the Art Tour that takes travelers into artists' studios and galleries under the guidance of expert and critic Alberto Cernuschi at $228 per person including accommodations in the New York Hilton . . . Weekend guest certificates in $10 and $50 denominations are being offered at 1,100 Holiday Inns . . .Miami Beach, suffering a dearth of visitors, has launched a courtesy campaign through its Tourist Development Authority after a survey showed rudeness was a major factor in the drop-off.

Plywood—The Versatile Building Product

Plywood — those great big boards offered in a variety of grades and types — is probably one of the most versatile building products you can buy from your lumber dealer.

With it, you can panel a room, build a boat, construct a house — 'most anything.

Plywood comes in standard sheets of four by eight feet, although larger lengths are available, and some lumber dealers pre-cut standard sheets to handy sizes such as two by four feet, etc.

DOUGLAS FIR plywood — the most common — comes in two types: interior and exterior.

Exterior has a waterproof glue bond between laminations; interior is intended for use inside and is so fabricated. Both types are plainly marked.

Plywood also is graded according to the quality of the surface of the panels. There are many grades; however, you'll probably need to know only the following information for most projects.

INTERIOR PLYWOOD

Panels, referred to as "good both sides," are graded A-A. It is smooth and free from knot holes and imperfections on both surfaces and it is used where both sides of the panel will show.

A-D grade panels are good on one side with some knot holes and cracks on the other side. If this side will be finished, you can fill the imperfections with water-mixed wood putty, sand it smooth, and paint over it.

EXTERIOR PLYWOOD

Similar to interior panels in A-D grade. Exterior A-C panels can be used for outdoor projects where the plywood itself will be the finished surface.

Sheathing grade plywood is termed C-D and is used for the exterior skin of a house or roof where another material will be applied over it. Use this material for playhouses, tool sheds, and projects where the panel will be covered from the elements.

THROUGH MODERN manufacturing techniques, there are many special kinds of plywood panels made — textured for decorative effects, overlaid, marine, and, of course, hardwood-plywood surfaces for paneling a wall. The latter come in a variety of woods — walnut, cherry, mahogany, oak, etc.

Most are prefinished so all you have to do is install it.

SUMMER TIME is surfing time. And with the aid of Surfboard Pattern No. 247 that you can obtain by sending $1 to Independent-Journal, Post Office Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., 10510, you can build your own sturdy, lightweight unsinkable board. The Easi-Bild pattern provides a materials list and complete step-by-step directions.

A Gazebo Makes The Ideal Place For The Outdoor Summer Party

With an entertainment gazebo, the summer hostess can enjoy the party as much as the guests.

Instead of being isolated in the kitchen with last-minute preparations, she can join the crowd and let the food practically take care of itself.

An outdoor entertainment center should be planned for performance as well as beauty. That means built-in conveniences, such as a barbecue, storage for fuel and utensils, and if possible, a refrigerator drawer to cut down on trips to the kitchen. The gazebo should have all-weather wood counters and benches to make eating and conversation areas within easy reach of the food center. The first step is to choose a good plan and the right materials.

FOR LUMBER, you can't go wrong with a western wood such as Douglas fir or red cedar.

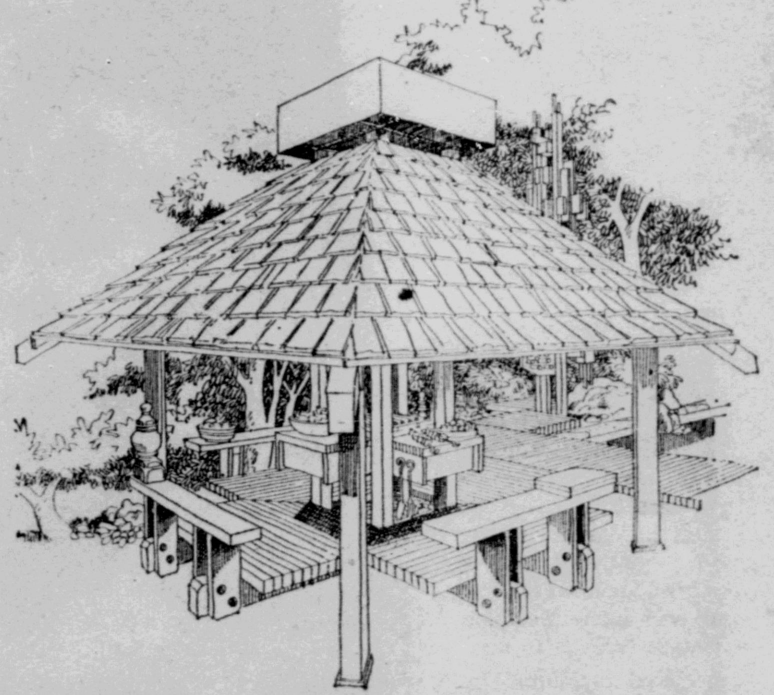
One plan shows a gazebo with a basic structure of four - by - eight - inch posts, resting on concrete footings, and a red cedar shake roof. The area beneath the roof is laid with tile and covered with coarse gravel for drainage.

The central barbecue fire, which is vented by a vertical flue extending through the roof, has a cap of matching red cedar boards. Built-in storage, refrigerator drawer and counters are clustered around the barbecue.

NEXT COMES the floor of the gazebo. In this case two - by - three - inch fir decking, nailed on edge, extends out to the roof line, where peripheral benches of two - by - three - inch planks are bolted to the deck supports.

This gazebo is square. The floor area measures 12 feet on a side, and the roof's overhang extends its coverage to 18 feet on each side. These dimensions can be changed with few complications except possibly for altering the roof pitch.

For detailed plans of the entertainment gazebo and four other garden structures, write to Western Wood Products Association, Department 539-P, Yeon Building, Portland, Ore., 97204. Enclose 15 cents in coin.



IT'S A BREEZE to entertain in this gazebo with its built-in barbecue, storage areas, wood counters and benches. A refrigerator drawer saves trips to the kitchen. The deck is laminated two-by-three-inch Douglas fir, the roof cedar shake. Send 15 cents to Western Wood Products Association, Department 539-P, Yeon Building, Portland, Ore., 97204, for the plans.

The Anatomy Of A Mad Mass Murderer

LINGARD by Colin Wilson; Crown, 286 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Colin Wilson, once the "whiz kid" of British literature, has been long been fascinated by violent crime — particularly the murderer who kills, not once, but several or many times.

Earlier this year he had published a study of murder through the centuries in which his thesis, supported not entirely convincingly, was that there have been trends or styles in homicide that are distinctive of their periods and thus are among the most revealing sources of understanding of man's past and present.

Now, in this novel, Wilson has relied heavily upon past research for that and earlier books to create a fictional multiple-killer.

His protagonist, Arthur James Lingard, is patterned principally after the infamous Dusseldorf mass murderer Peter Kurten. But Wilson also uses the case histories of other celebrated slayers in constructing Lingard's character and background.

His narrator is Dr. Kahn, psychiatrist for the prison where Lingard is incarcerated. The book deals with Kahn's almost obsessive investigation into the factors and motives that have made Lingard a rapist and killer.

The story that Kahn uncovers is sordid — of an orphaned boy who has transferred his Oedipus attachment unhealthily to his older sister. Who began mixing his undisciplined sexual appetite with fantasies in which he built up a wholly unrealistic, all-powerful picture of himself that he could never fulfill. The record discloses an arrogant, yet uncertain boy, youth and young man who has declared himself beyond the normal restraints of society.

To Wilson, his Lingard is an example falling somewhere between two classic patterns of violent criminals:

"The right man" type as outlined in A.E. Van Vogt's "The Violent Man" — the person who paranoically refuses to admit the possibility that he is or was ever wrong. It is a category in which belong many of the world's despots and dictators.

Wilson's own "outsider" classification — a person more imaginative and talented than those around him, possessor of more will and drive than they do. But whose special qualities are misdirected.

Lingard, however, seems much closer to Van Vogt's "right man" than to Wilson's "outsider." His special abilities exist only in relation to the generally drab people around him and the dreariness of his environment (an exception is his earthy sister Pauline, a far stronger and more interesting character than Lingard). His will and drive sputter and falter, even in their misdirection.

Wilson describes "Lingard" as "an attempt to point out that 'right men,' are not necessarily and completely wrong."

The effect upon this reader was the opposite. Lingard seemed to us an example of just how very wrong and just how dangerous these egomaniacs can be. And we do have many among us who cannot conceive or concede of their ever being mistaken. All are not violent criminals. But all are potential menaces.

Wilson has written with his usual fine feeling for rhetoric an unpleasant book saturated with sex and heavy with the confusions and heartaches of today's troubled society. It is not a book that makes with any clarity the kind of point he says he is attempting. It describes one aspect of man's malaise, but the treatments suggested seem to deal with symptoms, not the disease.

The Story Of Jerusalem Holds Key To Today's Mideast Crisis

TEMPLE BEYOND TIME by Mina C. Klein and H. Arthur Klein; Van Nostrand Reinhold, 191 pages. Reviewed by Paul Brindel.

"We cannot escape history," Abraham Lincoln warned in his second annual message to Congress.

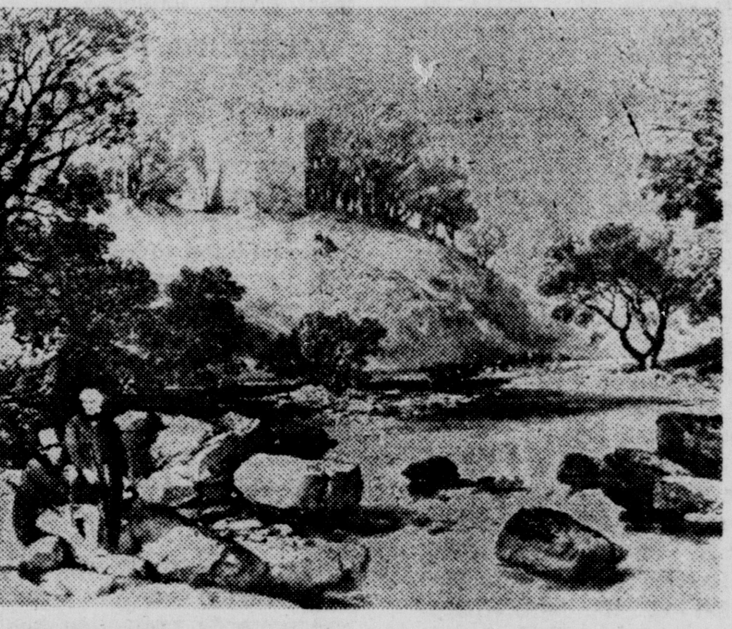
Considering the millions this country has poured into Israel since its Independence Day, May 15, 1948, this book seems to be almost "must reading." It is "the story of the site of Solomon's Temple," but it compresses 30 centuries of history — King David in 1000 B.C. buying Mount Moriah, site of the first temple, founding Jerusalem which for centuries was to be called "the City of David."

"No city in all man's history is more famous," the man-and-wife authors point out. Besides the successive temples of Solomon, Zerubabbel and Herod the Great, Christian churches dating to the Byzantine era, there is the Dome of the Rock built in the Seventh Century on Mount Moriah to mark the place from which Mohammed ascended to paradise. Today's Middle East crisis "can only be understood through knowledge of the past," the authors insist.

Except from A.D. 1095 to 1171 when the Crusaders held Jerusalem, the book reveals that Jews "managed to live in or near the city" from its destruction and the temple by Titus in A.D. 75 to 1948 when the original "Old City" of Jerusalem became a part of Jordan. For the ensuing 19 years, until the "Six Day War" of June, 1967, Jews were excluded.

Yet, for the 12 and a half centuries Islam ruled the city, there is recounted some "accommodation" between Moslems and Jews. In 1847, the latter had grown to be the majority of the population of Jerusalem.

Mark Twain was the first American of note to visit Mount Moriah and the Dome of the Rock in 1867, from which non-Moslems had been excluded until 1865. In "Innocents Abroad," the humorist described his visit in detail.



A LITHOGRAPH by G. Cattermole (1800-1868) showing William Wordsworth and Walter Scott at Newark Tower is among the pictures in the illustrated biography, "Wordsworth and His World" by F. E. Halliday, a $6.95 Studio Book published by Viking Press.

A Seminar For Writers

Blair Fuller, Herbert Gold and Oakley Hall will conduct a "non-conference" for writers and persons interested in writing Aug. 22-29 at Squaw Valley, sponsored by University of California Extension.

A few short manuscripts will be selected for use in workshop sessions.

Mornings will be devoted to methods of developing personal expression as well as to the disciplines needed for effective communication. Afternoon sessions will offer general discussions of poetry, short fiction, the novel, non-fiction and the adaptation of fiction to film. There will also be evening meetings on such topics as "Can creative writing be taught?"

Delicate Topic, Quaintly Handled

HOW TO MAKE LOVE by Locke McCorkle; Grove Press, 147 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Marji Parr.

Man is the least instinctive beast in the animal kingdom; therefore, he must take lessons on making love. So holds the Bay Area author of this book, subtitled "The Spiritual Nature of Sex."

And, indeed, he may have a point. If only to unlearn what's been taught.

Locke McCorkle (obviously not a made-up name, unless perhaps by W. C. Fields), has, according to the book flap, combined writing with the construction business. One fancies him as one of those muscular street knaves that you just know is an artist or poet when he isn't making money. (An illusion shattered if he's neglected to use his Right Guard.)

But enough romancing, and back to "How to Make Love," a title reminiscent of the advertising theory that "How to" ads always sell. The book scores in the technique chapters, but is inclined to lose in the spiritual chapters, which are interwoven.

In a delicate subject, the style rarely offends, although there are those who prefer Anglo-Saxon brevity to mawkish euphemism.

On the plus side, McCorkle takes on the women's liberation issue solving the matter for once and all by instructing the "bra-burners" to give in, not to a man, but to their own sexuality.

On the minus side, McCorkle fluffs over lightly the encounter thing that's all around us . . . with sketchy references to the "Odd-Ball Circuit." It cannot be denied that the encounter movement is effecting some changes in some sexual patterns. It's shaking them up, anyhow.

The gallant McCorkle suggests that when the lady indicates an interest in making love, the gentleman, be he ever so bored with the idea, always professes enthusiasm. A charming notion, if impractical.

Non-traditional sex, the kind that is occasionally against the law, is simply left out of the book.

"How to Make Love" would be more agreeable if it were less quaintly sentimental, less arch. Nevertheless, it does have some helpful hints to the homemaker.

"Can Ball Point Ink Be Removed From A Garment?"

As strange as it may sound, hair-spray, the American Institute of Laundering has found, will remove ball-point ink stain.

Ball point ink stains have been a long-time headache for cleaners and home-makers. Removal has been a real trial. Now, A.I.L. suggests that any surface ink be scraped from the fabric. Care should be taken not to damage the fabric when scraping. Then apply ordinary lady's hair-spray. Allow it to dry, then have the garment drycleaned or laundered. If any stain remains, and some may, repeat the process. The A.I.L. Laboratory says you'll regain full usefulness from the ball-point ink stained garment by this method.

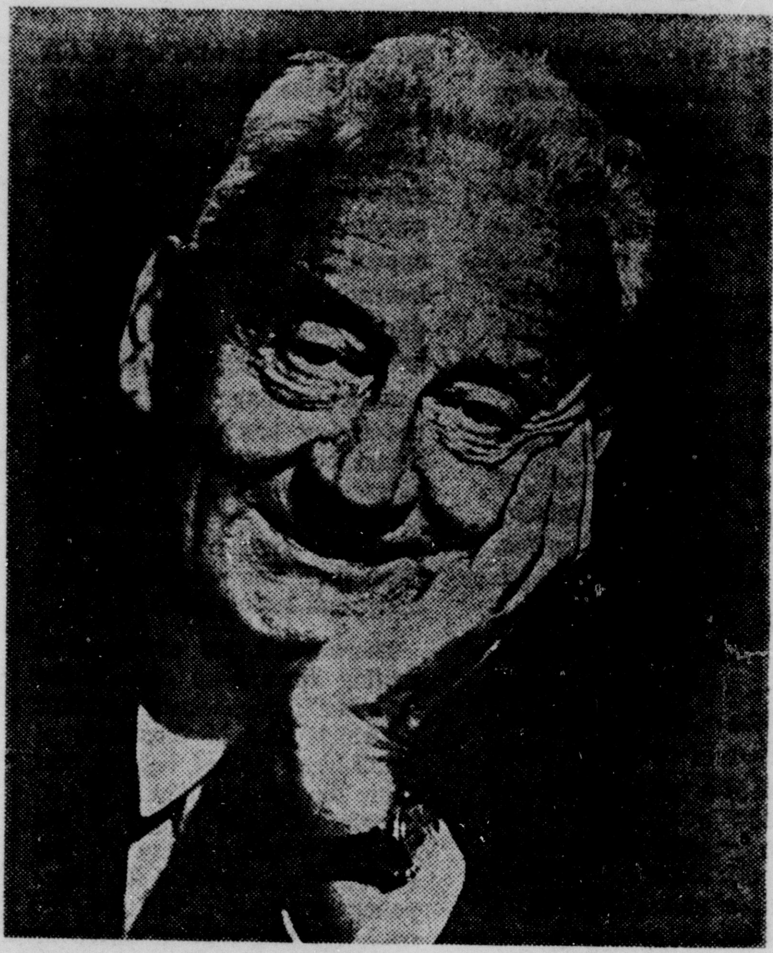
Two Sages Diagnose The Sick Society



ALBERT Szent-Gyorgyi was born in Hungary in 1893 and educated in Budapest and at Cambridge. In 1937 he won the Nobel Prize for his studies on metabolism and for his discovery of ascorbic acid (Vitamin C). During World War II he was a fugitive, hunted by the Nazis. And after the war he fled Europe and Stalinism to come to this country where he has since carried on research at the Marine Biological Laboratory at Woods Hole, Mass. In his book, "The Crazy Ape," he expresses his despair at the way society has used his work and that of his colleagues in science, and challenges youth to build a better society making a richer, beneficial use of technology.

The Book Pages

THE PURSUIT OF LONELINESS by Philip Slater; Beacon Press, 154 pages, $7.50.

THE CRAZY APE by Albert Szent-Gyorgyi; Philosophical Library, 93 pages, $3.95.

By DON KEOWN

Two learned men, one an educator and social scientist, the other a researcher and physical scientist, have authored books in which they diagnose the condition of American culture as critical.

While they share the belief that our society is gravely ill, they are not in total accord as to the germs that have caused our sickness, nor as to the antidote that should be prescribed for recovery.

Philip Slater, Brandeis University's sociology department chairman, in his "The Pursuit of Loneliness," blames our problems upon our obsession with technology.

"I am arguing," he writes, "for a reversal of our old pattern of technological radicalism and social conservatism. We pretend that. . .we actually achieve social stability — that technological change can be confined within its own sphere. Yet this is not so. Technological instability creates social instability as well, and we lose both ways."

Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi, research scientist at the Marine Biological Laboratory, Woods Hole, Mass., and Nobel Prize winner for his discovery of Vitamin C, sees the problem differently in his "The Crazy Ape."

"It is evident to me," he writes, "that a world created by science can be run safely only by the spirit and methods of the science which created it. It is impossible to create a new world by means of science and then run it on the basis of outdated, sentimental principles like fear, lust for power and domination."

For Dr. Szent-Gyorgyi, "the spirit of science is that of goodwill, mutual respect and human solidarity." To him science has been the victim, not the culprit. It has not been the scientist who has misused the products of his creativity, but rather his exploiters.

But Slater sees technology itself as an enemy running wild, although he emphasizes that he is not advocating "any brand of bucolic romanticism."

"I only want to remove them (the machines) from their position of mastery," he says, "to restore human beings to a position of equality and initiative."

To regain his dignity, Slater warns, man must renounce his allegiance to the outworn concept of individualism, and adopt the communal and collective approaches suited to today's highly complicated civilization.

Slater is in agreement with psychiatrist Dr. Alexander Lowen who in his "Pleasure" (June 6 Marin Magazine) outlined his thesis that mankind has chosen the wrong objectives — money and power — when it should be striving for pleasure.

"In our society pleasure is allowable only as a means to an end which is itself a mere means," Slater claims. "It must in some way or another yield energy for the economy. Pleasure is made scarce, for example, by making it illegal. . ."

A direct confrontation between Philip Slater and Dr. Szent Gyorgyi to debate the proposition — has man perverted science, or has science enslaved man? — would be a memorable encounter. Perhaps there is some truth to both their charges, and man now finds himself subjugated by a Frankenstein of his own creation. But in this indirect collision of ideas through their books, at least, Slater seems to have a bit the better of the argument.

"We say," he writes, "this or that invention is valuable because it generates other inventions — because it is a means to some other means — not because it achieves an ultimate human end. We play down the 'side effects' that so often become the main effects and completely negate any alleged benefits.

"The advantages of all technological 'progress' will, after all, be totally outweighed the moment nuclear war breaks out. . ."

Despite some basic differences in their ideas, the shared concern of Philip Slater and Albert Szent-Gyorgyi brings them closer together in their thinking than they are separate.

The latter is as distrustful as the former of the old culture, and incensed by what he sees as a double moral standard for the individual and for the community or government.

"We go to the polls to elect hawks and vote endless billions for war and the formidable machines of killing and destruction, and then go to church and ask for God's blessing," Szent-Gyorgyi writes.

"Who will defend us against defense departments?" he cries.

His answer to his own question is that youth must undertake that task. He urges the young people of all countries to "get together and hammer out the constitution of the world they want to build." But he adds that not only must they plan for the future, but they must take immediate action by "hunting out of their governments the merchants of death and destruction."

The last is a suggestion that can only cause disquiet in an already nervous Establishment.

In two small books these two sages have given us much food for thought. In the finer analysis, their differences are not irreconcilable. Their agreement that there is cause for alarm and that there must be change — drastic change — is the central, urgent message of both books.

"UNDER THE Moon of Mars" (Holt, Rinehart and Winston, $7.95) is a history and anthology, with Sam Moskowitz as author and editor, of the curious fiction genre known as the "scientific romance" that began with the publication of Edgar Rice Burrough's adventure story of the book title in 1912. The selections are taken from the Munsey pulp magazines, and Moskowitz' history is as much a story of those publications as it is a story of the scientific romance tale.

Scence fiction fans, and particularly the older ones with lingering memories of the pulps, will regard this newest book with the same enthusiasm they have displayed for earlier Moskowitz-edited collections.

THE NOVEL "All About Hatterr" by G. V. Desani that achieved an "underground" popularity after its publication in 1948 has been reprinted by Farrar, Straus and Giroux in a $5.95 edition and is now billed as "a modern classic." Said T. S. Eliot of it: "In all my experience, I have never met with anything quite like it." You'll probably say the same. Certainly the language — "a sort of creative chaos," wrote Anthony Burgess — is unique. And language is the essence of the book.

DOVER Publications has issued a $3.75 reprint in its distinctive high quality paperback format of Janet Waring's "Early American Stencils on Walls and Furniture." The work, accepted as the most authoritative book available on its subject, a now nearly vanished art, first appeared in 1937, and is republished unabridged, with 166 plates of illustrations, showing views of stencils, close-ups of detail and tools.

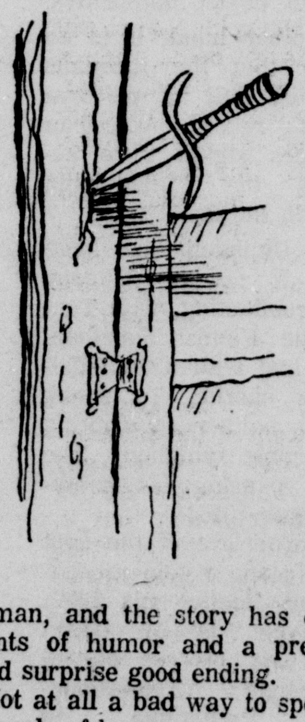
THE ESSAYS that make up his "Dr. Outlandish: Drug Scene and Sundry Subjects" are described by their author, Dr. Charles H. Sprague, as "an antidote to hysteria."

Sprague, project director for a clinic, is one of those physicians who have stepped outside the medical Establishment to work with alienated youth and to write for the underground press. Dr. Outlandish is the name he has signed to those articles. And his chapter titles include the likes of "On 'Doing Up' in General and 'Speed' in Particular" and "In Pursuit of the Powder-Blue Double-Barrel Peppermint Metal-Flake Wedge."

The theme is not pro-drug. But society's present methods of dealing with the problem are often questioned. And Sprague attempts to use the verniacular of today's young to reach and impress upon them the danger of undisciplined experimentation.

Sleuths & Suspense

THE SECRET HOUSE OF DEATH by Ruth Rendell; Doubleday, 179 pages, $4.50. Reviewed by Mary Leydecker.



The setting is one of those dreary suburbs where neighbors delight in what appears to be a love affair between a housewife and a man who sells furnaces. Although the scene is England, there is a ring of familiarity about the situation for American suburbanites.

When Louise North and her suspected lover are found dead, everyone, including Susan Townsend, a rather sad young divorcee who lives next door, accepts the verdict of suicide.

Susan is even rather kind to Louise's bereaved husband.

In the end, however, Susan — and the reader — are convinced that circumstances were not at all as they appeared.

Susan is a likeable young woman, and the story has elements of humor and a pretty good surprise good ending.

Not at all a bad way to spend a couple of hours.

New Books For The Juniors

Somewhat belatedly, publishers have realized that young readers in the sub-teens and early-teens are capable of absorbing books of serious subject matter, intent and tone. For instance:

"Beyond Diplomacy" (Parents Magazine Press, $4.50) by writer and political science teacher Richard J. Walton deals with a topic that youngsters 12 and older formerly would have encountered only in a textbook or not at all.

Without pulling punches, Walton reviews a record neglected by many popular histories of U.S. military interventions in foreign countries — in Mexico, in Cuba, in the Philippines, in China, in the Caribbean, in Lebanon. The book stops short of the most controversial of all our military ventures, Vietnam. But young readers will be able to regard it with a better understanding of how we came to be involved after reading "Beyond Diplomacy."

It isn't always nice to Uncle Sam. But then, today's youth has shown an impatience with anything less then the total truth.

"Students in Revolt" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95) by Janet Harris, Long Island University teacher and long-time civil rights worker, and other contributors takes up a continuing chapter in our contemporary history that these young people are writing themselves. It is a sympathetic look at youthful unrest that sees a single thread — the quest for student power — running through all the various demonstrations and actions. Frustration is the key word. And the book spells it out.

"The Most Native of Sons" (Doubleday, $3.95) is a superior biography of Richard Wright by another major black writer, John A. Williams. It is a well-told story of triumph over the pressures that plague all black people — even the creative ones. It should lead to increased appreciation of Wright's great gifts. And to a tardy awareness of just how much society has wasted in ignoring the potential of an entire race. Williams makes these points without equivocation.

"Slavery in America" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95) by Robert Liston is part of the Of Black America Series, and is a history of America's most shameful institution. No attempt is made to make a pretty story of the practice by which men regarded and treated other human beings as so much livestock. Liston has researched deeply and has come up with shocking information. So monstrous were slavery's evil consequences, Liston notes, that black people still today are handicapped by its lingering repercussions. Liston turns a strongly worded spotlight on a subject generally glossed over by the school texts.

"Life in traditional Vietnam is rural and harmonious," begins the introduction to "The Toad is the Emperor's Uncle" (Doubleday, $3.95). It's a beginning that is enough to make one weep. The book, however, is a delightful and colorful retelling of old Indo-Chinese fables by Vo-Dinh, French-schooled Vietnamese-born artist now living in Pennsylvania. Vo-Dinh narrates in a warm style filled with child-appeal and has done his own illustrations that are stronger, darker than the usual delicate art of the Orient. Belatedly, Americans have learned that the Orient has produced other proud and cultured people besides the Japanese and the Chinese. Our old notions of superiority have been exploded. Best that the new generation learn that lesson early.

There was a time when sports-writing ranked as one of the "glamor" occupations, a career to which tens of thousands of small boys aspired, hopeful that some day they might mix and mingle with the fabled of the athletic world. Today it has somewhat less appeal for fewer youngsters. But it still remains an interesting field of endeavor as Robert Lipsyte of the New York Times demonstrates in his "Assignment: Sports" (Harper Row, $3.95). It is a panorama of Lipsyte's "beat" from the 1968 Olympics in Mexico City to baseball's spring training camp and Arnold Palmer on the golf course. Young sports "addicts" will enjoy this opportunity to "see" the greats of the games through the eyes of a perceptive and enthusiastic professional.

Literary "heroes," except for a few of the more adventurous like Jack London and Mark Twain, have been pretty much ignored as subjects of biographies for junior. Richard O'Connor moves into that void with his "John Steinbeck" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95), telling of the life, and the work and the beliefs of an American writer genuinely concerned and greatly gifted. It is nice to see a book about a modern literary figure, and O'Connor has performed his project with the excellence and sensitivity his subject merits.

"In the Wilds of Africa" (Four Winds, $3.95) by Robert Halmi is an exceptional book, despite the absence of color in the photographs. Halmi, a veteran of the safari and a network television director and cameraman, takes up the more interesting animals of the Dark Continent, one by one, and reveals some surprising and interesting facts about each. Some good animal photographs supplement his entertaining and enlightening text.

The Important Role Of Play During Childhood

THE COMPLETE BOOK OF CHILDREN'S PLAY by Ruth E. Hartley and Robert M. Goldenson; Apollo Editions, 484 pages, paperback, $3.95. Reviewed by Maxine Keown.

These two psychologists and guidance specialists first collaborated on this scholarly work about the important and often overlooked role of play in a child's development in the late 1950s. It was subsequently updated and revised, and this is the softcover version of that more recent edition.

The book has been much used and much praised as a guide for parents in providing their children with the most rewarding play tools and experiences.

From the baby in the crib to the older hobbyist and pet-owner, the many varying aspects of play are covered.

And despite the professional backgrounds of the co-authors, the book is entirely intelligible to the layman and filled with practical, every-day advice and explanations.

"The best play materials are often those we do not buy at all, but collect — beautiful junk," we are told, for instance, in an early chapter.

On The Stereo Scene

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—RCA is selling a recording of Shostakovich's 13th symphony on the allegation that it is a "symphony of protest" by a composer angry at the way things are in the Soviet Union.

Maybe so. It has had only three performances in Russia. It is a setting of poems by the eminent poet, Yevtushenko, one of which may have been offensive to Soviet authorities.

On the other hand, it is no less likely that the Russians found it too dull to perform often or to record. American performances rights were acquired by the Philadelphia Orchestra in the usual way.

And the Philadelphians have recorded it, with Eugene Ormandy conducting, with Tom Krause, the Finnish baritone, as soloist and with a Philadelphia male chorus. To speak softly, it is neither an exciting nor memorable symphony. The composer is using his established devices (3162).

Most provocative of the first Beethoven piano music recordings of this Beethoven's 200th birthday year is by Glenn Gould. As virtuoso he played the "Moonlight," "Appassionata" and "Pathetique." As musicologist he comments on them on the back of the album.

His admiration for Beethoven has reservations and his opinion of the "Appassionata" is a very low one. The "Pathetique" he admires within limits and the "Moonlight" is for him a "masterpiece." Virtuosos probably are well advised to keep their fingers busy and their mouths shut. Perhaps unjustly the reader-listener may well think the opinions are reflected in the playing (Columbia-7413).

It was inevitable that Beethoven's first known compositions would be recorded again, and here they are—the three "Elector" sonatas played by Jorg Demus and eight variations and a sonata for piano duet played by Demus and Norman Shetler. The composer was around 11 years old. The music has no suggestion of what he was to become (Deutsche-Grammophon 139448).

Much more interesting than very early Beethoven is fairly late Vaughan Williams. It is his two-piano concerto—two pianos to carry percussive weight over the accompanying orchestra. The recording was made by Vitja Vronsky and Victor Babin with the London Philharmonic, Sir Adrian Boult conducting, and also included is Boult's effective interpretation of Vaughan Williams' eighth symphony (Angel-36625).

Wally Cox—His Bag Is Nature

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—"The polliwogs are plentiful in the little creek right now," said Wally Cox, the humorous man who is a regular on the panel of "The Hollywood Squares."

It's fitting in this time of ecological awareness that Wally speaks up. He has been a flower and bird watcher most of his life.

HIS BAG is nature. All wildlife, flora and fauna alike, has been his passion. While other performers swim and ski or play golf or tennis, Wally tramps the Hollywood Hills and the Santa Monica Mountains, discovering streams and canyons untouched by man.

He lives just off Mulholland Drive high in the hills in a rustic, artistic house that once consisted of five rooms. He has knocked out walls and reduced his home to three rooms: bedroom, kitchen-living room and a combination sitting room-writing room.

A secretive fellow, presumably for his own good reasons, Wally is married but keeps his wife's name to himself.

NEITHER WILL he discuss his offspring by a previous marriage.

This is his third marriage and he says it is a very happy one. Both he and Mrs. Cox are first-rate cooks. His friends are often invited to the house for Chicken Wally, frozen chicken seasoned and wrapped in foil to bake. He also cooks pork chops in beer.

A man of no pretensions, Wally works only one day a week, reporting to NBC for "The Hollywood Squares" at 6 p.m. and working until 11 p.m.—taping all five shows one after the other.

THE REST of the week he devotes to looking for work—television guest shots, movies.

His most recent film assignment is in Disney's "I'll Trade an Elk," in which Wally plays one of his favorite types, an incompetent assistant to a shady character.

Cox is working on a television special of his own, "Wally Cox's Los Angeles." He is doing all the photography himself.

"THERE WON'T be any buildings, cars, billboards or works of men in it," the actor explained. "It will consist of flowers, birds, trees, mountains, greenery and running water, all within the city limits."

Every other day he tramps the fields and hills, sometimes without his camera.

WALLY COX
A secretive but happy man

Cox and Marlon Brando, friends since childhood, see each other often, although Brando doesn't share Wally's joy for field and stream.

THEY DO agree about clothes. Wally dresses as casually as possible. He has worn the same suit on the television show for four years. The other (he has only two) is seldom worn. For variety he wears different neckties, choosing among the four he owns.

When Mr. and Mrs. Cox entertain at home the party is usually restricted to a half dozen guests. Any more than that, he feels, eliminates the possibility of good conversation.

For kicks Wally rides a motorcycle. Slowly. He has no plans to enter races with such speed burners as Steve McQueen.

FOR SEVERAL years Cox made his home in Connecticut, but now he is a hard and fast Californian.

"I'm happier than I have ever been," he says. "I have a sense of community, belonging, living in one place permanently."

Saga Of Marin's Miwok Indians Had A Sad Conclusion

Once Proud People Vanished From Region They Had Ruled

ed their Indian help kindly. But others were little more than slavemasters.

One of the better employers was Capt. William Richardson of the Rancho Saucelito. His son, Steve, said of his father's hands:

"It is well-known they enjoyed good health. They lived in an equable climate, had no booze to break down their health prematurely, and the habit to taking daily sweats with the accompanying plunge into cold water was conducive to good health. The blood was pure.

"THEY NEVER had a toothache. Probably this was due to their simple diet, without any element that would produce acidity. I never knew an Indian with a missing tooth unless he lost it by accident . . .

"They retained their eyesight, unimpaired, to a great age. I am sure I never saw a short-sighted Indian, and still less one who was noticeably deaf . . . "

Alas, the fate of most Indians in Marin was far less happy. An epidemic of smallpox that started at Fort Ross and swept through Sonoma and Marin took a heavy toll of their population.

AND WITH California now a state and Marin the 27th of the original counties, it was definitely white man's country.

The once plentiful game had been slaughtered by market hunters for hides and tallow. The Indians were forced to subsist on clams and fish, so that many lived along the shores of Tomales Bay.

A few remained in the Nicasio vicinity, among them Jose Caleistro, a chief and said to be the last of the full-blooded Indians of Marin.

There is a sad commentary that bespeaks the final fate of Marin's once thriving Indian populace in the "History of Marin County" published in 1880 by Alley, Bowen & Co. It states:

"THE NICASIO Indians were at once time a very powerful tribe numbering many thousands and filling the whole valley, but they have vanished before the silent forces of civilization . . . Dire contagion stalked through the land and claimed many tithings for the charnel house of death, and later the accursed 'firewater' of the white man overcame and destroyed the sons (of the once proud Indians), while the souls and bodies of the daughters were sold in prostitution . . .

"Thus have their ranks been decimated until scarcely a score can be mustered, and the once populous village contains only eight wigwams now.

"What few remain of the tribe live upon a tract of about 30 acres, situated about two miles east of Nicasio in a lovely valley which was purchased by Jose Caleistro, their last chief, of William J. Miller, several years ago, as a home for the remnants of his people. The county appropriates $40 a month for their support which together with the pittance of wages they earn and the game they kill, affords them a meager sustenance.

"THERE ARE five who are very aged, indeed — in fact, so old that nothing can be obtained that would establish the dates of their births, and they are almost helpless.

"They are patiently waiting for death to come and take them to their people who have gone before them, long ago, to the happy hunting grounds."

It is a sad ending to a saga in which the white man once again covered himself with shame, rather than with glory.

AND IT BEHOOVES us all when we sometimes feel superior to these primitive aborigines who are among us no more to stop and wonder:

Are fume-spewing automobiles really superior to fleet Indian ponies? Are processed and re-processed foodstuffs really better for us than the simple fare of the Indians? Is the hectic pace we set for our daily lives really more fulfilling than the leisurely life lived by the Miwoks?

Might we not still learn some lessons from these humble people who lived in harmony rather than hostility with nature?

ARCHAEOLOGICAL DIGGINGS such as this one being conducted by San Francisco State College students at Marinwood have unearthed artifacts that have contributed to our knowledge of the Coast Miwoks and their way of life. Some 500 Indian mounds have been recorded in Marin County. (Independent-Journal photo)

ARTIFACTS unearthed from Indian mounds, such as this spearhead held by Kate Partride, have told us much about Marin's Indians.

The 'Cone Family' Will Serve You Well

THERE ARE coniferous plants to fit almost every landscape need. In fact, that can be said of the juniper family alone. Shown here in the foreground is a planting of the groundcover-type Emerald Spreader with its green branchlets providing a feathery appearance. In the background is the Table Top Blue Juniper, a medium-grower excellent as a showpiece with its semi-spreading, flat-top silvery-blue branches. Junipers offer an array of forms, textures and colors as well as sizes.

For real 12-months-of-the-year beauty, the foliage of evergreen conifers can't be beat. Marin nurserymen have coniferous (cone-bearing) plants to fit every landscape situation — from low-growing junipers to giant redwoods.

Within the juniper classification there are groundcover types, low-growers for borders, excellent medium-sized ones for foundation plantings, and columnar-types for outstanding accents.

AT GROUND level the blue-gray coloration of San Jose and Bar Harbor varieties and the silver-blue of Wilton's Juniper are excellent choices for filling-in expanses.

A step higher, Andorra Juniper and compact Golden Pfitzer Juniper are self-shaping and spreading. The latter's coloration is a highlight and Andorra's blue-gray foliage takes on a handsome plum color in colder months.

Gold Coast Juniper, which has chartreuse shadings to crisp green foliage, is a newer introduction with great promise.

IT'S HARD TO pass up the popular Pfitzer Juniper with its bluish-green color and spreading fine branches. This one is a foundation planting favorite and enjoys great use in local landscapes.

Blue Vase and Pathfinder are the names of two upright-growing junipers that are exciting accents in the garden. From a distance or up close, these take everyone's fancy. Your nurseryman will have these or similar varieties for you to use.

Yews are noted for the dark green of their needles. They are adaptable and hardy, even in partial shade. Erect-growers, in dense upright columns, yews are lovely in the ground or in large tubs. They are ideal in formal settings.

A FEW MORE of the many conifer cousins include the many pines, arborvitae, cedar, cypress and spruce.

Members of the "cone family" are noted not only for their beauty, but their ability to survive under severe conditions. For Marinites, this indicates the various conifers require little attention.

Gift Ideas For Gardening Dads

Garden Page

Father's Day is June 21, and throughout Marin many gardening dads will be gifted, with a variety of prized plants, garden gadgets and books.

For the family whose dad is a green thumber, Father's Day shopping is simplified. Anything that nurtures his horticultural instincts will be appreciated and cherished.

Nurserymen report one of the "most wanted" gift items today is a tubbed dwarf citrus. Dwarf citrus in a redwood tub provides year-'round enjoyment — luxuriant foliage, fragrant blossoms and colorful and tasty fruit.

LOCAL NURSERIES have the citrus varieties best for our area and an assortment of containers into which your choice may be planted.

Some nurserymen will have larger-sized specimens available, and chances are these will already be adorned with fruit.

Perhaps "Pop" wouldn't pamper himself by buying his very own fertilizer spreader with which to feed his lawn, but you can imagine his delight on Father's Day when he receives his own. A suggestion would be for a thoughtful offspring to volunteer to feed the lawn for Father; but he will probably want to try out the new spreader for himself — first!

MANY NURSERIES have varieties of plant materials — such as Wax Leaf Privet, Eugenia, or Myrtus — trained into topiaries, globes or pyramids. Chances are if Dad is a regular visitors to the neighborhood nursery he has had his eye on one of these attractive specimens. These may be planted to dramatize an entryway or used as a focal point where their magnificence will show, or used as decorative pieces in tubs or large pots.

There's a pride of ownership that accompanies such unusual plants — as is the case with all living gifts.

Visit your nursery and investigate the Father's Day gift opportunities.

Besides a variety of blooming plant materials and foliage plants you'll find how-to gardening books, specialized garden equipment and a myriad of accessories which will add to the enjoyment of gardening for your Dad.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

Here is the Marin gardener's checklist for the coming week:

✓Grow your own corsages. Gardenias are available in containers at nurseries, and will give you not only exquisite white blooms but also a charming garden fragrance in coming summer evenings.

✓Cultivate your garden beds regularly to eliminate young weeds and to loosen soil compacted by watering.

✓Hurry to plant tuberous begonia seedlings and chrysanthemum plants.

✓Hydrangeas can be planted now in rich, well-drained soil and in filtered shade. The newer, low-growing hydrangeas are ideal for tubs or for planting beneath trees. Keep them well watered during the summer.

✓Don't hesitate to thin out fruit trees that are bearing too heavily. You will encourage larger, more perfect fruit by so doing.

✓There is still time to plant summer bedding plants, but do it now. In planting, be sure to turn the soil deeply enough to insure a free and easy root run.

✓Mulching, especially around shallow-rooted specimens such as camellias, azaleas and fuchsias, is the secret to freshness in the summer garden. Don't spread a paper-thin layer. Peat moss, leaf mold or the like can go on two inches thick, bark products even more thickly.

Plywood—The Versatile Building Product

Plywood — those great big boards offered in a variety of grades and types — is probably one of the most versatile building products you can buy from your lumber dealer.

With it, you can panel a room, build a boat, construct a house — 'most anything.

Plywood comes in standard sheets of four by eight feet, although larger lengths are available, and some lumber dealers pre-cut standard sheets to handy sizes such as two by four feet, etc.

DOUGLAS FIR plywood — the most common — comes in two types: interior and exterior.

Exterior has a waterproof glue bond between laminations; interior is intended for use inside and is so fabricated. Both types are plainly marked.

Plywood also is graded according to the quality of the surface of the panels. There are many grades; however, you'll probably need to know only the following information for most projects.

INTERIOR PLYWOOD

Panels, referred to as "good both sides," are graded A-A. It is smooth and free from knot holes and imperfections on both surfaces and it is used where both sides of the panel will show.

A-D grade panels are good on one side with some knot holes and cracks on the other side. If this side will be finished, you can fill the imperfections with water-mixed wood putty, sand it smooth, and paint over it.

EXTERIOR PLYWOOD

Similar to interior panels in A-D grade. Exterior A-C panels can be used for outdoor projects where the plywood itself will be the finished surface.

Sheathing grade plywood is termed C-D and is used for the exterior skin of a house or roof where another material will be applied over it. Use this material for playhouses, tool sheds, and projects where the panel will be covered from the elements.

THROUGH MODERN manufacturing techniques, there are many special kinds of plywood panels made — textured for decorative effects, overlaid, marine, and, of course, hardwood-plywood surfaces for paneling a wall. The latter come in a variety of woods — walnut, cherry, mahogany, oak, etc.

Most are prefinished so all you have to do is install it.

SUMMER TIME is surfing time. And with the aid of Surfboard Pattern No. 247 that you can obtain by sending $1 to Independent-Journal, Post Office Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., 10510, you can build your own sturdy, lightweight unsinkable board. The Easi-Bild pattern provides a materials list and complete step-by-step directions.

A Gazebo Makes The Ideal Place For The Outdoor Summer Party

With an entertainment gazebo, the summer hostess can enjoy the party as much as the guests.

Instead of being isolated in the kitchen with last-minute preparations, she can join the crowd and let the food practically take care of itself.

An outdoor entertainment center should be planned for performance as well as beauty. That means built-in conveniences, such as a barbecue, storage for fuel and utensils, and if possible, a refrigerator drawer to cut down on trips to the kitchen. The gazebo should have all-weather wood counters and benches to make eating and conversation areas within easy reach of the food center. The first step is to choose a good plan and the right materials.

FOR LUMBER, you can't go wrong with a western wood such as Douglas fir or red cedar.

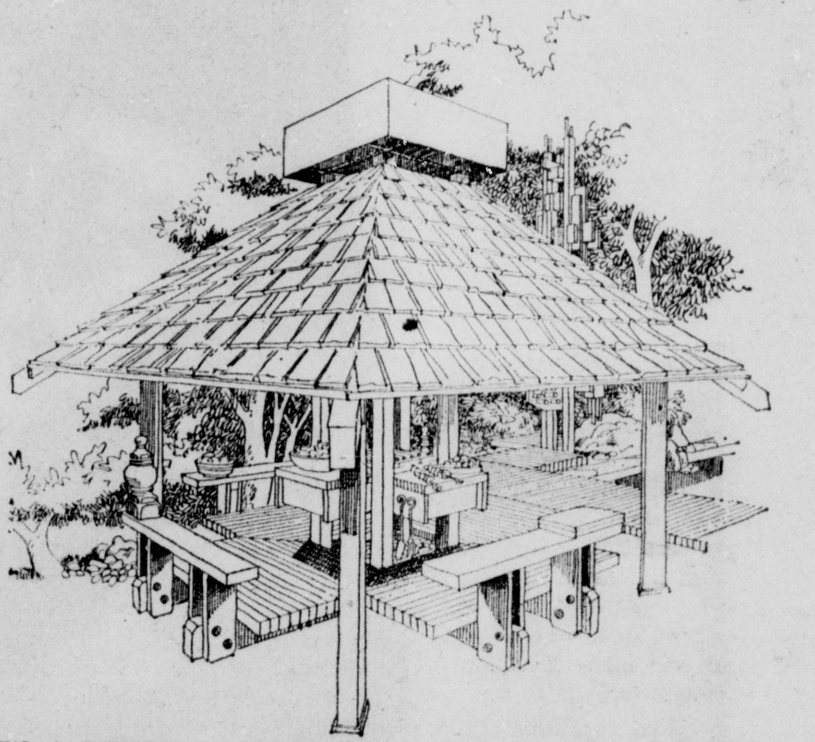
One plan shows a gazebo with a basic structure of four - by - eight - inch posts, resting on concrete footings, and a red cedar shake roof. The area beneath the roof is laid with tile and covered with coarse gravel for drainage.

The central barbecue fire, which is vented by a vertical flue extending through the roof, has a cap of matching red cedar boards. Built-in storage, refrigerator drawer and counters are clustered around the barbecue.

NEXT COMES the floor of the gazebo. In this case two - by - three - inch fir decking, nailed on edge, extends out to the roof line, where peripheral benches of two - by - three - inch planks are bolted to the deck supports.

This gazebo is square. The floor area measures 12 feet on a side, and the roof's overhang extends its coverage to 18 feet on each side. These dimensions can be changed with few complications except possibly for altering the roof pitch.

For detailed plans of the entertainment gazebo and four other garden structures, write to Western Wood Products Association, Department 539-P, Yeon Building, Portland, Ore., 97204. Enclose 15 cents in coin.



IT'S A BREEZE to entertain in this gazebo with its built-in barbecue, storage areas, wood counters and benches. A refrigerator drawer saves trips to the kitchen. The deck is laminated two-by-three-inch Douglas fir, the roof cedar shake. Send 15 cents to Western Wood Products Association, Department 539-P, Yeon Building, Portland, Ore., 97204, for the plans.

'No Early End' To Viet War: Klein

Indochina Report To Press

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Herbert G. Klein, the administration's communications director and a member of the team President Nixon sent to Indochina on a fact-finding mission, said Friday night that "we can see no early end" to the Vietnam War.

Klein, who returned to the United States last Tuesday after touring Vietnam and Cambodia for several days with the 13-man team, said the situation in the war zone was inproving.

'MAKING GAINS'

"We're making gains, we're making progress," he said. "No one can say how much or how soon ... but the fact that we're making significant progress is a very encouraging thing in a war which perhaps will be prolonged. I think we can see no early end."

Klein issued his forecast in a speech at the annual awards dinner of the Washington chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, the national professional journalistic society.

CAMBODIA PRAISE

The administration official said he fame home convinced that the U.S. operation in Cambodia had been highly successful because it resulted in the capture of large amounts of Communist weapons and supplies at a relatively low price in terms of casualties. He added that the element of

Reds Threatening Cambodia Lifeline

SAIGON (AP) — The Communist command in Cambodia was reported building up pressure Saturday on Kompong Speu, threatening to cut off Phnom Penh's last remaining road link to its major seaport and vital oil supplies from abroad.

The Cambodian capital depends on oil to generate its electricity and it has but 15 days' supplies on hand, officials said.

A military spokesman in Phnom Penh said about 1,000 Communist command troops were believed massing for fresh attacks on Kofpong Speu, the key town on Route 4 about 30 miles southeast of the capital.

The roadway runs to Kompong Som, formerly Sihanoukville, Cambodia's major seaport, and site of Cambodia's only oil refinery.

Kompong Speu has been under attack for the two days but no casualty reports were available. The military spokesman said the U.S.-built highway was still open but travel on it was risky.

In other Cambodian action enemy mortar attacks were reported 80 miles north of Phnom Penh at Kompong Thom on the road to the historic ruins at Angkor, where Communist command troops were reported to have set up supply depots and hospitals in the Angkor temple complex.

Cambodian officials hace said Angkor would be declared an "open city" to avoid destruction or damage to its temples, some dating 800 years.

Nixon Names Campus Panel; Hickel Ouster Hints Denied

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (UPI)—President Nixon Saturday named a nine-member commission headed by former Gov. William W. Scranton of Pennsylvania to recommend ways to control campus violence and prevent future tragedies like the killings at Kent State and Jackson State.

As the President spent a relaxing weekend at his Florida retreat, the traveling White House denied persistent reports that Interior Secretary Walter J. Hickel will be replaced soon as a member of the Cabinet. (See earlier story, page 2.)

Named to the Commission on Campus Unrest along with Scranton were four whites and four blacks, including two police officials, three college faculty members, one student, one attorney and one newspaper editor.

"There is nothing that any of us can do to restore the lives that have been lost or to undo the other effects of past campus violence," Nixon said in a formal statement. "But the commission can help us to avoid future incidents of the sort which occurred this past spring."

The administration announced plans to appoint the commission following the killing last month of four students at Kent State University in Ohio and two students at predominantly black Jackson State College in Mississippi.

White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Hickel "has not submitted his resignation and he has no intention of resigning." Asked if the President has requested Hickel's resignation, Ziegler replied: "We have not. I know of no intention for us to ask for his resignation."

But when newsmen asked if the President was "happy" with Hickel's work, Ziegler relevant. Secretary Hickel is proceeding with his work as Secretary of Interior."

The press secretary said later he did not mean to imply that Nixon was "unhappy" with Hickel.

Scranton, 52, was governor of Pennsylvania from 1963 to 1967. In 1964 he made an unsuccessful bid for the Republican presidential nomination that went to Sen. Barry Goldwater.

Others named to the commission were James Ahern, 38, police chief of New Haven, Conn.; Erwin D. Canham, 66, editor-in-chief of the Christian Science Monitor; Dr. James E. Cheek, 37, president of Howard University in Washington; Benjamin O. Davis, 57, public safety director of Cleveland; Martha A. Derthick, associate professor of political science at Boston College, Bayless Man-

Marin County Staff Workers Get Welfare

At least five full-time employees of the County of Marin are receiving welfare under a special program designed to put public assistance recipients into jobs, county officials disclosed yesterday.

The five are working in the public social services department as welfare aides, earning a monthly salary of $451 plus public assistance grants.

Donald Sanford, assistant to department head Betty L. Presley, said there may be two other county employees working under the program but their identity is not known as present.

The disclosure was a result of an investigation begun last month by County Auditor-Controller Michael Mitchell after it was revealed that highly paid county employees in Alameda were on welfare.

The five Marin workers are getting assistance under Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Miss Presley said the grants are made possible under a 1967 amendment to the Social Security Act.

Mitchell explained that the amount of aid is based on a state formula that takes into account such factors as number of children, age, sex and family circumstances.

Miss Presley said the program is not limited to govern-

Jordan In Uneasy Quiet, 134 Americans Evacuated

AMMAN, Jordan (UPI)—Despite a fragile peace in Amman after five days of fighting, diplomats said today Palestinian guerrillas and the Jordanian government were so far apart in their views that a new crisis seemed inevitable.

Guerrillas controlled much of the city but government forces surrounded it with tanks and heavy weapons.

To achieve even a temporary break in the fighting, King Hussein of Jordan had to agree to remove his uncle, Sherif Nasser Ben Jamil, as commander-in-chief of the army.

Hussein warned it was his last concession and that if backed into a corner, he would fight. Diplomats said the guerrillas were keeping the pressure on with their rejection of a political settlement to the Middle East crisis.

Hussein repeatedly has said he would negotiate with Israel.

This difference on such a basic issue is bound to result in more friction and cause the crisis to flare again, the diplomats said.

More than 500 persons were killed or wounded in the street fighting over guerrilla demands to be allowed unrestricted raids on Israel from Jordanian bases.

Foreigners were fleeing the country, many leaving their belongings behind.

The U.S. embassy was reduced to a skeleton staff and Britain warned all its citizens in nonessential jobs to leave.

In Cairo, political sources said Egypt intervened with the Palestinian guerrilla leadership to protect American lives and secure the release of captives in Amman.

(The sources said a number of American dependents were given shelter at the Egyptian Embassy residence in Amman at the height of hostilities between guerrillas and Jordanian forces.)

About 300 persons, most of them Americans, Britons and Germans, flew to safety aboard chartered aircraft Friday. They included many of the 65 persons

Mosquitos Budget Up; Tax Holds

A $178,563 1970-71 budget, up $28,563 from this year's, has been approved by the Marin County Mosquito Abatement District board.

Allan D. Telford, district manager, said the tax rate will be held at 2.5 cents per $100 assessed valuation for the seventh consecutive year.

Major budget items include $120,503 for salaries and benefits, up $10,375 from this year; $31,045 for services and supplies, up $1,125, and $25,015 for fixed assets, up $15,064.

Telford also announced appointment of two new members to the board: Lt. Col. Robert B. Rankin of Mill Valley and Gilbert Dubuc of Larkspur.

Mosquito activity in the district has been held this spring to the lowest level in three years, he reported, but yellowjacket activity has increased during the last month.

BUT THE SHOW WENT ON . . .

Proud parents were assembling for the San Rafael High School commencement last night when the rains came, sending the audience clutching for makeshift shelter. Anything was useful — coats, blankets and programs. This couple's anxious expression soon disappeared, however, when the shower stopped and the graduation ceremony went on. Cambodians Denounce Rumor Of Split Nation

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (UPI)—High-level Cambodian government officials today described as "ludicrious" published reports that Cambodia has decided to cede control of almost half the country to Communist forces.

The reports, not carried by UPI, were widely printed Friday.

One official Cambodian source, closely connected with Premier Lon Nol, said the story was "obviously Communist propaganda."

"As you can see by our communiques, there is fighting in all our provinces," the source said in explaining that Cambodian forces were contesting North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in all parts of the country.

Another high-level source said: "This story is ludicrous. We haven't given any part of Cambodia to anyone and never will—particularly the Communists."

U.S. sources were particularly upset at what one described as "unfounded rumors at best."

Laos Troops Recapture A Key City

VIENTIANE, Laos (UPI) — Military sources said today Laotian troops have reoccupied the important province capital of Saravane. It was seized by Communist forces last Tuesday.

Field reports reaching Vientiane from Saravane, in southern Laos, said government patrol units reentered the city after heavy air strikes by American-built T28 fighter-bombers and that North Vietnamese troops made no attempt to resist.

Sources said the North Vietnamese may have withdrawn to take up positions in the hills.

The loss of Sarvane had been described as a serious blow because it gave the Communists control over a wide area of southern Laos, including the breadbasket region known as the Bolovens Plateau. It appeared that the Communists were trying to establish a new sanctuary there to replace havens lost in Cambodia.

Election Upheld

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The California Supreme Court has denied the petition of Los Angeles County Supervisor Kenneth Hahn to invalidate the entire June primary election on grounds of "massive foulups" in vote counts.

Wilson To Moscow?

LONDON (AP) — The Soviet government proposed today that Harold Wilson, as prime minister, make an official visit to Moscow late next month.

FLAG DAY REMINDER

The Pentagon released today this Marine Corps photo taken at Hill 119 in South Vietnam as a reminder that tomorrow is flag day. The battle scarred colors flutter as a helicopter brings supplies to the Marine outpost six miles west of Da Nang. (AP Wirephoto)

Marchers Promote Flag Day

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Thirteen labor leaders wearing hard hats and a group of local Elks Club members conducted a demonstration Friday on the state Capitol steps to promote Flag Day.

"It's publicity all the way through to get something in the paper that Sunday is Flag Day," explained Bill Richards, Americanism chairman for the North Central District of the Elks. "We're not getting involved in labor or anti-this or that."

The local labor leaders, dressed in business suits, stood on the steps while a man dressed as Uncle Sam walked toward them carrying the American Flag. He was followed by three Boy Scouts who distributed small flags to the labor men and the few spectators..

Richards said the hard hats were not worn in support of New York construction workers who attacked antiwar student demonstrators.

"It's a gimmick to call attention to Flag Day," he said. "We're trying to get people to talk and think about patriotism."

Induction Refusal Charge Is Denied

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — A San Rafael man pleaded innocent Thursday in U.S. District Court to a charge that he refused induction into the Army March 17 in Oakland.

The case of Chris D. Ghilotti of 90 Grande Paseo was continued to July 24.

13, Including Judge, Face Stockton Counts

STOCKTON (UPI)—A grand jury has indicted 13 persons, including a prominent lawyer and a judge he is accused of bribing, in what investigators said was an attempt to loot a financial firm of 1.5 million.

Authorities said the name of the superior court judge involved would not be made public until arrangements were completed for his surrender on charges of accepting bribes.

Among the crimes charged Friday were grand theft, issuing checks with insufficient funds, bribing a financial officer and bribing a judge.

Gordon Rose, deputy attorney general, said thrift certificates, similar to certificates of deposit, were purchased from AVCO Thrift Co. with worthless checks, while some were stolen outright.

AVCO Thrift, a financial institution which is a subsidiary of AVCO Corp., actually did not lose all the money despite the fraudulent schemes, Rose said.

He said the FBI recovered many of the certificates, including one seizure of $600,000 worth in Nevada last March. Final loss to AVCO was estimated to be about $200,000.

In addition to the lawyer and judge, the indictments included businessmen and a bank president who is head of the Port Commission in this shipping and agricultural community 50 miles east of San Francisco.

Leonard Pores, 51, newly reelected to a four-year term as president of the port commission and president of the Stockton Bank of Agriculture and Commerce, was charged with conspiracy to pervert and obstruct justice and conspiracy to commit grand theft.

Attorney John Barkett, 35, was charged with bribing a judge and grand theft.

Joseph A. Broderick, 50, who has been fired as head of AVCO's Stockton office, was charged with being a financial officer who accepted bribes.

Rose said another AVCO branch manager, Frank Yaddow, 43, previously had been charged in a complaint with violating the financial code. He was not mentioned in the latest indictments.

"AVCO was extremely cooperative," said Rose in apparent reference to some financial institutions in similar situations who prefer to take their losses quietly to avoid public scandal.

Among the others indicted were:

Albert Weisinger, 61, co-owner of a Stockton fur shop, bribery and grand theft;

Gust Mazoros, 47, Hayward, bribery;

T.H. Rivers, 35, Orinda, conspiracy to commit grand theft and bribery of a financial officer;

Herbert A. Cox, 36, Los Angeles, conspiracy to bribe a financial officer and issuing worthless checks.

No other details were given in the indictments. Authorities said the names of the others indicted would not be made public until after they were arrested.

Kennedy Endorsed

AMHERST, Mass. (UPI)—Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was endorsed by acclamation for a second full term Friday by the State Democratic Convention and pledged to campaign for "the rebirth of the American dream."

State Sen. President Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke won a six-hour first ballot battle for the convention's gubernatorial endorsement over Boston Mayor Kevin H. White and former lieutenant governor Francis X. Bellotti. The convention also adopted a plank in its platform demanding an immediate return of U.S. servicemen from Indochina.

Senators Disagree On Budget Impact

SACRAMENTO (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee promises to try for a balanced 1970-71 state budget without a tax increase, but another senator says local taxes will have to go up if state spending for some programs is cut.

Sen. Donald Grunsky, R-Watsonville, said Friday he expected the Senate to quickly approve a heavily amended version of the Assembly budget bill Tuesday. The Senate amended the Assembly measure Friday to bring it into balance in the face of an unexpected $141 million deficit.

The Assembly failed to agree Thursday on ways to bring the budget back into balance, so it approved the original—and unbalanced—$6.48 billion proposal made by Gov. Reagan in February. That proposal was thrown out of balance by rising welfare and Medi-Cal costs and unexpectedly low tax revenues because of the cooling economy.

A Democratic senator who sits on the Finance Committee says it isn't possible to balance the budget without increasing the average taxpayer's total tax bill.

Sen. Stephen P. Teale, D-West Point, said major cuts in state spending would mean smaller state contributions to local governments.

"If local government wants to maintain its present level of services there will have to be a hike in the local tax rate to make up the difference in lost state funds," Teale said.

Teale was critical of the Republican governor, who he said "zeroed in on his favorite targets — higher education and welfare — as the places to find the money needed to balance the budget."

But Teale said the Senate Finance Committee, in deciding on a 1.6 per cent across-the-board cut to help balance the program, "rejected the idea of hitting education and the sick and the poor and decided instead on an across-the-board reduction ... so that in effect everyone would suffer equally."

Assemblyman James W. Dent, R-Concord, commented Friday he didn't agree completely with the across-the-board cut "because so much money is tied up in programs which would require statutory changes before reductions could be made."

MISSED BRIEFING

Deepening Rift Between Hickel And President?

WASHINGTON (UPI)—There is widespread speculation in the Interior Department that Secretary Walter J. Hickel may be on his way out because of his deepening ideological split with President Nixon.

The speculation of growing alienation has arisen because Hickel did not attend a White House news briefing on one of his key antipollution proposals Thursday.

A spokesman in Hickel's office denied a report the White House had canceled an invitation to Hickel to attend the news briefing Thursday. The briefing was held on Nixon's request to Congress for authority to buy back federal oil leases that pose a pollution threat to a marine sanctuary in the Santa Barbara Channel off the California coast.

Relations between Nixon and Hickel have been strained since last month when the former Alaska governor sent the president a letter saying the administration was in danger of alienating the nation's young people.

Hickel has been working hard for the oil lease repurchase plan since an oil well blowout in the Santa Barbara channel last year fouled beaches in the area.

Sources indicated there was a possibility Nixon would not remove Hickel, but would diminish his role in administration affairs. Hickel complained at the time he wrote his letter that long periods of time elapsed between meetings between Nixon and his cabinet members.

Nixon Opens Income Tax Files For Douglas Probe

WASHINGTON (UPI) —President Nixon has given the House Judiciary Committee permission to inspect Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas' income tax returns in connection with its inquiry into possible impeachment of Douglas.

Nixon previously wrote a letter to Rep. Emanuel Celler, D-N.Y., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, in which he authorized all federal agencies to cooperate with the investigation.

Friday Nixon signed an executive order directing the Internal Revenue Service to open Douglas' returns to inspection.

It was learned the special subcommittee agreed this week to seek an extension of the June 20 deadline by which it was supposed to report its recommendations to the parent Judiciary Committee.

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford, who spearheaded the impeachment drive, was said to have agreed an extension was needed.

Coroner Tells Little About Thoresen

FRESNO, Calif. (UPI)—The Fresno County coroner says William E. Thoresen III, the mysterious millionaire with a passion for guns, was shot five times in the back.

That is apparently all he will say.

Coroner's pathologist Dr. John Miller said Friday Thoresen died from bleeding in the chest cavity caused by live bullets which entered his back. He said the district attorney had told him to release only that information.

Deputy Coroner Lt. Walter Cook said he doubted the full report would be made public because "publicity might be harmful to the case."

Thoresen's attractive wife, Louise, 34, pleaded innocent Friday to murdering her husband with a .38 caliber revolver from his massive arsenal.

Thomas Jefferson refused to proclaim Thanksgiving, denouncing it as a "monarchial practice."

Brazil Bows To Rebel Note On Kidnaping

RIO DE JANEIRO (UPI) — The Brazilian military government broadcast a revolutionary proclamation from the kidnapers of West German Ambassador Ehrenfried von Holleben today in an effort to save the diplomat's life.

The kidnapers demanded the publication of their seven-point program, including an appeal for increased guerrilla warfare against the government, as a condition for the release of the 61-year-old ambassador.

The government did not reveal whether there were other demands. President Emilion Garrastazu Medici and his top aides, who flew to Rio de Janeiro from the capital in Brasilia, were coordinating the efforts to rescue Von Holleben.

In Dusseldorf, West German Chancellor Willy Brandt said his government was taking "both conventional and unconventional" steps to seek the ambassador's release. The reference to unconventional methods was thought to refer to an appeal to Washington for U.S. help in negotiating the release.

Terrorists with submachine guns abducted Von Holleben Thursday night, killing one of his bodyguards and seriously wounding two others.

Von Holleben is the ninth diplomat to be kidnaped in Latin America since September, and the third in Brazil in the past year. The West German ambassador to Guatemala, Karl von Spreti, was kidnaped in March and killed when ransom demands were not met.

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

Prince To Canada

OTTAWA (UPI) — Prince Charles, heir to the British throne, will attend an all-star football match and tour Parliament Hill during a two-day visit to Canada's capital, it was announced Friday.

The young prince will be in Ottawa July 2-4 before joining Queen Elizabeth in Frobisher Bay for a 15-day tour of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, officials said.

Peru Aid Urged

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The founder of a California organization soliciting aid for victims of the massive earthquake in Peru has returned from Lima with a plea for more contributions.

C. W. Robinson, who formed the California Friends of Peru Committee for Emergency Relief, said Friday the greatest need is replacement of destroyed structures.

Robinson and San Francisco physician Lester Luz flew to Lima Tuesday aboard a chartered Braniff 707 carrying the first load of emergency supplies donated in the Bay Area.

Rubber Strike Ends

AKRON, Ohio (UPI)—B. F. Goodrich Co. and the United Rubber Workers Union were scheduled to sign a new three-year contract today, ending a five-week nationwide walkout.

Operations at the plants were to resume Monday. Production and maintenance workers in Los Angeles returned Friday.

The agreement ends a nationwide strike against Goodrich and the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., which signed a contract June 10.

Talks were continuing with the General Tire and Rubber Co., Uniroyal, and the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. while work continues on a day-to-day basis.

Knoxville Unrest

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI)—Police sealed off a four-block area in a predominantly black section of Knoxville Friday night after several altercations followed a shooting incident.

An area near the Lonsdale housing project was closed for about an hour and a half while members of the Knoxville Urban League and other groups went into the area to talk with residents and calm tempers. The incident followed the shooting of Nathaniel McDowell, 23.

McDowell, a Negro, was shot in the left hand and treated at a local hospital and released. Robert Ray Neff, a white, was held as a suspect in the shooting.

Mayors Convene

DENVER (UPI)—The mayors of 400 of the nation's cities gather in Denver today to consider methods of cleaning the air, filling their coffers and calming social unrest.

The 1970 conference of mayors also was expected to hear a call for President Nixon to move ahead with his plan for a system of revenue sharing.

Sir Laurence Becomes A Lord

Olviier

LONDON (UPI) — British show business personalities walked away with the Queen's list of honors today, led by Sir Laurence Olivier who became the first actor to be dubbed a peer.

Queen Elizabeth, on her official birthday, named Olivier the first lord of the British theater and also gave royal orders to actor Richard Burton and television personality David Frost.

Burton was created a commander of the Order of the British Empire (O.B.E.), and Frost was made a member of the order.

Olivier was made a knight in 1947 by Elizabeth's father, King George VI. The peerage will give him a seat for life in the House of Lords.

By tradition, Olivier may now choose his own name, but friends said he would probably keep his own name, becoming Lord Olivier.

Other actors honored in today's list included Nyree Dawn Porter and Margaret Tyzack, who appeared in the international popular television series "The Forsyte Saga." They both received the O.B.E.

John Schlesinger, who directed the Academy Award winning film "Midnight Cowboy", was also presented with the Order of the British Empire.

Dame Sybil Thorndike, 87, was created a "companion of honor."

Cleric's Death Fulfills Rumors

Allen

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Even as his recorded voice reassured radio listeners. The Rev. A. A. Allen was alive and well, the faith healer and evangelist lay dead in a San Francisco hotel room.

Allen, 59, who built his ministry into a multimillion dollar business, died late Thursday of unknown causes. He was the founder and president of A. A. Allen Revivals, Inc., in Miracle Valley, Ariz.

A spokesman at Miracle Valley said it was "a strange coincidence" that on the day Allen died, radio stations throughout the country which carry his taped program were broadcasting Allen's recorded voice denying rumors of his death.

The dynamic and passionate preacher built his nondenominational Christian religious organization into a multimedia communications business. It sponsored Allen's frequent revival tours around the country, the daily radio program and a weekly television show.

It also publishes books on spiritual subjects and the monthly "Miracle Magazine" with a circulation of 350,000.

Funeral services and burial tentatively have been set for 1 p.m. Monday at Miracle Valley.

THE PLEA

Nothing in years
    Has touched me as much
As the Doctor's plea
    For Leukemia research;
My face is wet—
    It is flooded with tears;
I lived thru this heartache
    For several years
And finally faced
    My greatest loss.
Not enough research
    May have been the cause;
Enclosed is my check
    With a prayer for sure
That endless effort
    Will find a cure

SAN RAFAEL — MRS. MANNY CERF

ON THE BAY

Geese, flying high, strung across the sky,
Dark beads, against the faded blue
Of a tattered Hippie shirt.
Sail, all becalmed, waiting patiently,
For a breeze . . . a hundred brides,
Seeking a bridegroom who seems to desert.

The city, a monstrous monopoly game,
Cut from cardboard, awaiting unseen players
Behind a curtain of fog.
The gulls, in a doleful chorus,
Screaming relentlessly, always off key—
Reality's unpleasant epilogue.

HIGH SPEED CRASH HURTS TWO

Corte Madera Patrolman Gregory Rossoff and tow truck driver Jim Wills view a battered 16-year-old model auto that overturned at high speed on the Highway 101 frontage road near Marin Joe's in Corte Madera early today. The crash, which occurred shortly before 3:30 p.m., sent the two occupants of the car, Louis Berry, 18, of 10 Fawn Lane, and Michael Brucoli, 17, of 940 Meadowsweet Drive, both Corte Madera, to Marin General Hospital. Berry was reported in poor condition today with facial cuts and chest injuries. Brucoli was treated for a bruised left leg. (Independent-Journal photo) surprise, which "was so criticized here," was crucial.

Klein had general praise for American reporting on the war, which he said is "very difficult to cover." But he said he noticed several instances while in Cambodia that news coverage was inaccurate or irresponsible.

School Looters Get $700 Haul

Cash and office equipment valued at almost $700 has been taken from the main office of Bahia Vista School, 30 Bahia Vista Court, San Rafael, police reported today.

Police said the burglars entered the building through the back door of a classroom between 5 p.m. Thursday and 7:20 a.m. yesterday.

The burglars also broke into the principal's office and ransacked a desk, but apparently took nothing, police said.

Asia Ballot Under Fire From Group

A November ballot measure in Marin urging Congress and the President to withdraw all American troops from Southeast Asia by June of 1971 drew fire yesterday from a group called Support Our Servicemen (SOS) Committee.

Raymond C. Kesner, chairman of SOS, asked for permission to speak Tuesday before the board of supervisors.

Supervisors last Tuesday decided to put on the Nov. 2 ballot a measure suggested by Anne West of San Anselmo. The measure would let citizens vote on whether they favored withdrawal of all troops by June of 1971.

"The measure as presently worded does not offer the voters a proper choice," declared Kesner. "We will propose a more positive measure that will offer the voters the choice of victory or surrender or to continue to fight a war with a no-win goal.

"It is a betrayal of the men who have fought and died in Southeast Asia to demand anything less than victory.

ning, 47, dean of Stanford University Law School; Revius O. Ortique Jr., 46, New Orleans attorney and former president of the predominantly Negro National Bar Association; Joseph Rhodes Jr., 22, a junior fellow at Harvard University.

An executive director of the commission staff will be named later.

Nixon said the chief purposes of the new commission are:

—"To identify the principal causes of campus violence, particularly in the specific occurrences of this spring.

—"To assess the reasons for breakdown in the processes for orderly expression of dissent.

—"To suggest specific methods and procedures through which legitimate grievances can be resolved.

—"To suggest ways to protect and enhance the right of academic freedom, the right to pursue an education free from improper interference, and the right of peaceful dissent and protest."

The president added: "It is my hope that the commission will help us discover what practical steps can be taken by all levels of government—including law enforcement agencies—to alleviate the dangers involved in this situation."

Clerics Rap Bruce Budget Cut Proposal

A group of 36 Marin county clergymen has protested County Administrator Alan Bruce's recommended cuts in the 1970-71 county budget for welfare programs, the human rights commission, the new careers program and the well-baby clinic.

The clergymen wrote an open letter to the supervisors yesterday opposing any efforts to abolish the new careers and human rights staffs or cut back welfare or clinic programs.

"We, as clergymen of Marin County, aware of the cost and problems of supporting low-income families, oppose the recommendation that supervisors discontinue the present level of supplementation," the letter said. (Because of Marin's high cost of living, the county provides supplementary grants to some welfare recipients.)

The clergymen asked supervisors to "join with us in supporting state legislation to increase the state participating base . . ."

Failure to do so, the ministers warned, would mean "increased problems of health, housing, malnutrition and crime" and would "adversely affect the general moral and spiritual health of the recipients and general public of Marin County.

The clergymen contended that "Marin County has one of the leading human rights commissions in the country, and it has succeeded through the efforts of a small but effective staff." They also said that the commission has brought $200,000 in grants to the county.

Rev. James Symons, pastor of St. Andrew United Presbyterian Church, Marin City, said clergy representatives will talk personally with each supervisor and will attend the public hearings on the proposed cuts.

The ministers will present to the supervisors petitions supporting the programs, Symons said.

Topless Ban Proposed For San Rafael

A proposed ordinance prohibiting "certain obnoxious conduct" — mainly topless and bottomless dancing — will be considered by the San Rafael City Council at its meeting Monday at 8 p.m.

The proposal is a result of plans by the Funny Farm bar at 813 Fourth Street to hire topless dancers and barmaids.

The council will also consider an amendment to the city's business license ordinance which would establish a procedure for licensing the business of conducting dances and other forms of entertainment.

An appeal of restrictions placed on a use permit for a public debris dump in the 1500 block of Jacoby Street will be before the council, as will plans for the landscaping of South San Pedro Road between Marina Boulevard and Lochinvar Road.

Prior to the meeting, the council will participate in the dedication of the American Legion foundation in front of city hall at 7:30 p.m.

Teen-Ager's Body Found On Shore

The body of a 13-year-old boy who vanished in the Dillons Beach surf three weeks ago was discovered washed ashore yesterday, the Marin coroner's office reported.

Deputy coroner Richard W. Madigan said two fisherman found the body of Roydean Pennington, son of Capt. and Mrs. James W. London of Travis Air Force Base, at about 10 a.m.

Madigan said Pennington and a classmate were running through the surf when they both fell into a shallow hole and were washed out. the other youth managed to swim to shore.

Pennington, on a science field trip from Crystal Junior High School in Suisun City when the accident occurred, had been the object of an intensive search by sheriff's deputies, the coast guard and residents.

Egg Vandal Hits San Rafael Cars

Sixteen San Rafael residents found their cars pelted with eggs yesterday.

Police reported that cars parged on Hoag and Canal streets were hit with eggs sometime before 3:30 a.m. yesterday.

An empty egg carton was found on Canal Street near the cars.

WELFARE

ment employment, adding there were many more welfare recipients in Marin taking part. But she added it applies only to welfare recipients and is designed to supplement low family income and at the same time afford work experience.

One Marin welfare aide, with one child, is getting $123 per month aid. This, together with the $451 county salary, brings her income to $574. The one receiving the most aid is a mother with eight children, who gets $333 per month, bringing her total income to $784.

Miss Presley said that because of the danger of high incomes, she would support limitations in the program.

The board of supervisors will discuss the issue Tuesday morning.

John D. Murphy, chairman of the Alameda County Board of Supervisors, has written a letter to the board asking Marin to join Alameda in a lawsuit to plug legal loopholes in welfare laws.

County Administrator Alan Bruce will recommend that Marin join in such litigation.

In one case in Alameda, a social worker was found to be receiving an annual salary of $10,100 plus alimony and child support of $3,600 and a $123-a-month stipend for the care of one child in a youth facility as a probation case.

WAR

units lost two men killed and three wounded in another of a series of bitter clashes that have been going on for five days near the war-battered town of Mimot.

Another 4,000 South Vietnamese troops were reported withdrawn from Cambodia on Saturday, leaving what military sources said was a 30,000-man government force still there.

The disclosure came with just 17 days left for all U.S. troops to be withdrawn from Cambodia. At last count—on Monday—12,600 Americans still were reported inside Cambodia fighting enemy forces.

The U.S. Command, which refused for security reasons to say how many Americans still are in Cambodia, said in an updated casualty report 287 U.S. soldiers have been killed and 1,251 wounded since May 1 in Cambodia.

It also claimed that 3,938 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops have been killed in joint American-South Vietnamese operations against Communist command sanctuaries along the Cambodian border.

In South Vietnam, troops from the U.S. Americal Division reported killing 43 North Vietnamese on Friday in two clashes near Hiep Duc, in the much fought-over Que Son Valley 34 miles southwest of Da Nang.

Span Officials To Study Hiring

A committee of the Golden Gate Bridge District will meet at 9 a.m. Monday in the toll plaza offices to discuss the stalled hiring of H. Donald White as transportation maganger for the district.

District directors refused to approve the appointment Thursday when it was learned White wanted a host of office amenities, including a private car.

The special session of the joint transportation and finance-auditing committee also will delve into costs for remodeling the district's new ferryboat.

Fairfax Youth Wounds Hand

A 22-year-old Fairfax man was treated at Marin General Hospital today for a self-inflicted bullet wound in his left hand.

Jeffery L. Booker of 73 Broadway told police he was removing a .22 caliber pistol from his waistband when the weapon accidentally discharged at 2:15 a.m. outside the residence.

Officers said Booker told them he was carrying the pistol because he planned to target parctice in the San Geronimo Valley Area.

OBITUARIES

Elsie Morrison Dies At 71

Funeral for Elsie Morrison, 71, a retired San Rafael school teacher, will be Monday at 2:30 p.m. at Keaton's Mortuary, San Rafael.

Mrs. Morrison, of 16 Bayo Vista Way, San Rafael, died yesterday in a San Francisco hospital following a long illness.

A native of England, she came with her family to the United States and California in 1912. She attended San Diego Normal School and taught school in Southern California for two years.

She and her husband, Raymond, who survives, moved to Marin in 1937 when he was stationed at Hamilton Air Force Base. The couple moved to San Rafael in 1942. Mrs. Morrison taught at Sun Valley and West End schools for 12 years before retiring in 1959.

She was a member of the Women's Club of San Rafael, the Retired Teachers Association and the Republican Women's Club.

In addition to her husband, who is a retired Air Force lieutenant colonel, she is survived by two daughters, May Stoy of Denver and Jean Goodwin of Corte Madera and five grandchildren.

Burial will be at Mount Tamalpais Cemetery, San Rafael.

GEORGE WALTERS

George Lewis Walters, of 2449 Center Road, Novato, died yesterday at a local convalescent hospital following a long illness.

Walters, 54, was a machinist but had been disabled for the last 12 years.

A native of Portville, N.Y., he had lived in California 23 years and in Marin for 10. He was a veteran of World War II.

In addition to his wife, Ruth, he is survived by his mother, Myrna Walters of Olean, N.Y.; three brothers, William Walters of Bellingham, Wash.; Jack Walters of Olean, and Richard Walters of Redwood Valley, Mendocino County, and two sisters, Winifred Carr of Portville, N.Y., and Pauline Detry of Santa Susana, Ventura County.

Funeral will be Tuesday in Greenville, Pa., with burial at Shenango Valley Cemetery, Greenville. Friends may call at the Redwood Chapel Mortuary in Novato until 9 p.m. today.

EDWARD GREENBAUM

PRINCETON, N.J. (UPI)—Edward S. Greenbaum, top New York lawyer, court reformer and public servant, died Friday at Princeton Hospital. He was 80.

Greenbaum also was a personal confidant to Svetlana (Stalin) Alliluyeva, helping the way for the Soviet dictator's daughter to come to this country three years ago. He crossed swords with the Kennedy family in defending Harper & Row's right to publish William Manchester's book "The Death of a President."

In a legal career that spanned 57 years, Greenbaum called himself an "old-fashioned lawyer" who always sought out the human relationships imbedded in his business transactions. He succumbed after a long illness in this university community where he and his wife, Dorothea, moved in 1954 from New York.

He is survived by bis widow, a sculptor, two sons and four grandchildren. The funeral will be private, with a memorial service to be held at a later date.

EDWARD O'DOUL

Edward A. O'Doul, a longtime San Rafael resident and driver for Borden's Dairy, died yesterday in a local hospital following a long illness. He was 59.

A native of Tehama, O'Doul was raised in San Francisco and moved to San Rafael 22 years ago. He lived at 8 Harte Avenue.

O'Doul was a veteran of World War II and was a member of the Young Men's Institute, St. Raphael's Council No. 10 and Teamsters Union Local 264.

He is survived by his wife, Mary; a son, Thomas E. O'Doul of San Rafael; a brother, Joseph A. O'Doul of Whittier; two sisters, Viola Black and Maybelle Welch of San Francisco, and a grandson.

Requiem Mass will be offered Monday at 9:30 a.m. at St. Raphael's Church, San Rafael, with burial at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

The Rosary will be recited at 8 p.m. tomorrow at Keaton's Mortuary, with Young Men's Institute services to be conducted at 8:15 p.m.

The family requests memorial contributions to Hanna Boys Center, Sonoma, and the American Cancer Society.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

'He Insists On Taking Golf Clubs On Our Honeymoon'

DEAR HELEN:

My boy friend and I have been disputing this since we started planning our honeymoon and we would like you to settle the argument for us.

He insists on taking his holf clubs with him on our honeymoon and I say he shouldn't. A vacation — yes, but not a wedding trip, which is for two people to do the things they mutually enjoy — and my feelings about golf are not exactly ecstatic.

What do you say? — FUTURE GOLF WIDOW

DEAR FGW:

How about a compromise? Tell your husband-to-be that you'll make room for the golf clubs — if he teaches you how to play golf on your honeymoon. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

I've been dating this boy for a year and three months. I love him very much but he treats me like a dog.

When I'm talking to him on the phone, he gets mad and calls me foul names, and if I start to cry he pushes the musical buttons down on his phone which he knows hurts my ears.

He wants to go out with other girls. I said okay, but now he says I have to tell a certain girl that we broke up so she'll date him.

But we're still going together. I said this wasn't fair to either of us and he really blew his top. He thinks lying is the easiest way out of things.

Outside of quitting him, how can I solve my problem? — SAN ANTONIO ROSE

DEAR ROSE:

I think your problem can only be solved by quitting him. Where's your pride? — H.

DEAR HELEN:

Students say that after the war is ended they will then protest pollution problems. Well, they can start right now: By picking up their cans, papers and garbage, and also cleaning up what others leave.

We were on a picnic Sunday, and each of us spent half an hour gathering all the old cans, bottles, and trash left by others. You can't believe the junk we picked up.

If everyone would do this, maybe a lot of ecology problems would be solved. — CATHERINE

DEAR CATHERINE:

Bravo!

Also — if everyone would put the flip-top tabs inside the cans before they begin to drink, a lot of first aid for cut feet would be eliminated. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

Maybe you won't print this, but I hope you do. Since our state is considering legalized abortion, I've done a great deal of studying on the subject.

An estimated one million abortions are performed in the U.S. each year. Only 8,000 are legal. Abortion is usually a safe, routine procedure, if done by a qualified doctor under sterile conditions. But incompetency and guesswork can cause injury and death. Some authorities believe illegal abortion is the major cause of death among pregnant women today.

Several recent court decisions have supported, at least in part, the view that many anti-abortion laws deny women their rights. Reformers agree it is the poor woman who has to pay, as safe abortions aren't available to them. The death rate from illegal abortion is 100 times higher among black and Puerto Rican women than among whites.

I am a sophomore and, like most of my peers, I'm very concerned with social problems. I'm definitely in favor of legalized abortions — and even more in favor of widespread birth control education that would make them unnecessary. — R.B.

CORINNE BOVAIRD

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Richard P. Bovaird of Novato are announcing the engagement of their daughter, Corinne Elizabeth, to Alfred Hoyt Guerrant, son of Dr. and Mrs. John S. Guerrant of Terra Linda.

Corinne is the sister of Cindy Bovaird, who is attending Chico State College, and Christy and Steven Bovaird. H. Robert Faltin of San Francisco and Mrs. E. M. Bovaird of San Mateo are her grandparents.

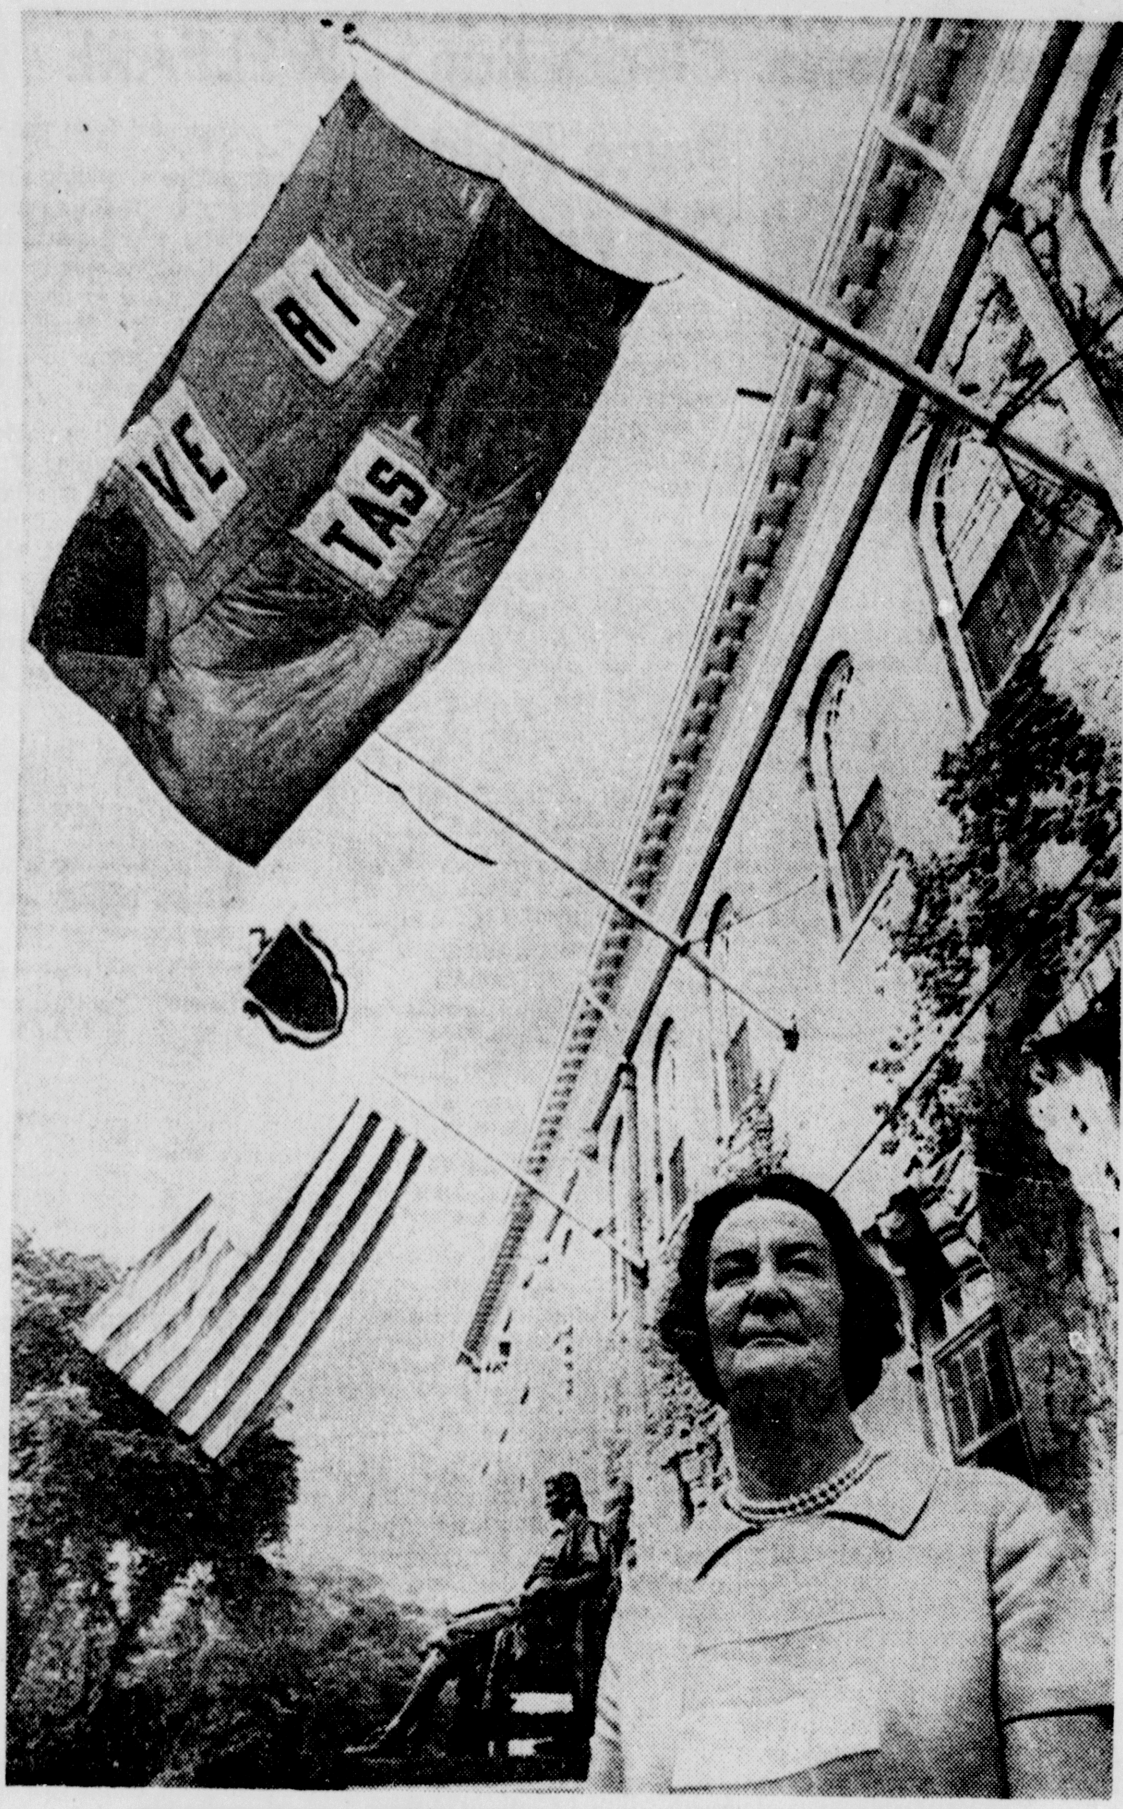
She was graduated from Novato High School and is attending College of Marin. She is employed with the Terra Linda Recreation and Park District.

Alfred is the brother of Susie Guerrant, attending college in Germany, and of John S. Jr. and David Guerrant. He was graduated from Terra Linda High School and is stationed with the Air Force at Randolph Air Force Base in Texas.

Force Discourages Musical Interest

Forcing a child to play the piano against his will is one of the surest ways to discourage his musical interest, says Constance Wagner, music education consultant.

"Be willing to compromise now and then," she says. "If your young virtuoso rebels against practicing at the usual after-school hour, for instance, propose a make-up session later in the evening or next morning before school. Give him the chance for bargaining power. He'll feel he's won the battle, but you'll have gained the long-range victory."



FIRST WOMAN IN 333 YEARS

Helen Homans Gilbert is the first woman named to Harvard's 333 year-old Board of Overseers. The Washington, D.C., woman was among five successful candidates in a mail ballot of all degree holders of the university. Here she stands in front of University Hall in Harvard Yard in Cambridge, Mass., where the board meets. The Harvard, Massachusetts and American flags fly above. In the background is the statute of John Harvard.

Eva Nieto Will Lead Epsilon Zeta Chapter

Eva Maria Nieto of San Rafael is the new president of Epsilon Zeta Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma honorary society for women educators. During eight years of membership she has served as corresponding secretary and first vice president.

The society's purpose is to unite women educators and to honor those who have a potential for distinctive service in any field of education, according to the new president.

Born in Marfa, Tex., Miss Nieto received a bachelor's degree from Our Lady of the Lake College in San Antonio, Tex., and a master's degree from the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. She has lived in Marin and taught at Reed School for seven years and in September will begin a new teaching assignment at Granada School in Corte Madera.

The new president is also a member of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese and the California Council of Foreign Language Teachers Association. Her interests are traveling, attending operas and plays, taking home movies and editing them, recording and listening to semi-classical music and playing the piano.

SEW SIMPLE

Techniques Are Listed For Sewing With Knits

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR READERS,

Every day I get many letters asking about sewing with knits. I shall devote most of this week's column to many of the questions you have asked. I would suggest you file this away for future reference because sooner or later you will succumb to them.

Pattern selection is important. Since knits do have a lot of give, you will find that darts are not as important. Double knits, wool or polyester, tailor beautifully for suits, coats or dresses; single knits are perfect for softer, less tailored designs. Select simple patterns for loose knits or bold prints. Avoid bias cuts or circular skirts.

Cutting and Marking: If center fold line will not press out, refold fabric and avoid original fold line. Always work on a long, flat surface to avoid stretching fabric. Use sharp pins and shears to avoid snagging. Mark carefully with tailor's chalk, or tracing paper. Never use wax chalk, it will stain the fabric. For lightweight jersey, pin pattern on the wrong side to minimize curling.

Stitching: Seams must have give to prevent the thread from breaking. For polyester knits, it is recommended you use the polyester thread, set your machine for about 12 stitches per inch, pulling your fabric slightly as you stitch. Only stay-stick the shoulder, neckline and armhole; never stay-stitch the long seams. Seam finishes are not usually required since most knits do not ravel. To prevent seam allowances on lightweight single knits from rolling, stitch about ¼ inch from edge.

Pressing: Press lightly in lengthwise direction without stretching your fabric. Place strips of paper under the seam allowance of lightweight knits to prevent impressions on right side.

Inner construction: Knits require less inner construction than woven fabrics. Interfacings are very important in certain areas such as necklines, jacket or coat fronts, collars, cuffs, etc. Never choose an interfacing that is too stiff because it would change the hang of the fabric. A fusible interfacing works beautifully for hems of knits. I shall go into the explanation of fusibles in my next column.

Underlinings: Knits are usually not underlined because they keep their shape during wear and the underlinings would limit the give of the garment. If the knitted fabric is not high quality fabric, even the underlining would not prevent stretching out. If you wish a separate lining in your knits, attach only at the neckline and armholes, letting it hang loose inside. If you wish to line a coat, be sure to use a washable lining fabric if the garment can be washed.

Finishing touches: Be sure to stabilize the area under the buttonholes, whether they are bound or machine made to avoid stretching. Be sure the zipper you choose is flexible. Check to be sure trims are compatible with the knits for washing or dry cleaning.

Hems: Allow any knitted garment to hang at least 24 hours before hemming. It's best not to hand sew the edge of the fabric to your garment for the hem, instead fold back about ⅜ inch and loosely slip stitch the hem to your garment. Never pull the stitches too tight, the results would be a pulled and obvious line. Hem finishes such as tape, lace, or whatever, are not necessary but can be used for a decorative touch, the hem itself should still be turned back and slip stitched to the garment as explained above.

MRS. PEARL Romans, Louisville, Ky., is this week's winner of the Tailor Trix pressing board for her suggestion:

"I'm sure that most women who sew would like to experiment occasionally to see how a collar, cuffs or any other detail would look on a pattern they are making. I have found that cutting these details from quilted paper toweling works beautifully. You can sew right through it, adjust it in any way, and it's strong enough to withstand these changes without tearing. When you get it the desired size, it works perfectly for a pattern when you cut your fabric."

DEAR EUNICE,

I'm making a silk blouse that doesn't call for a facing; it is merely lined to the edge. It is necessary to use interfacing for this type of neckline and if so, how would I cut it without a pattern?

MRS. R.E.C.

DEAR MRS. R.E.C.

I find that most women stretch the neckline if they don't use an interfacing, and there's nothing worse than a neckline that is too large. The neckline is probably the most important of all areas to interface since the entire circle is on the bias.

If your pattern does not call for a facing, just use the pattern itself as a guide for cutting the interfacing. Use the neckline as your guide, making your interfacing about 3 inches deep. Pin and machine stitch it to the wrong side of your fabric, then apply your lining and the neckline of your dress will never stretch out of shape.

You will find it handy to have the free "Fabric Conversion Chart" in your purse when shopping. The chart tells you what amounts of fabric would be needed in other widths according to a given width. Send a stamped, self-addressed envelope with the request to Eunice Farmer in care of the Independent-Journal.

ON THE AGENDA

Clipped Wings To Install New Officers Tuesday At Luncheon

Clipped Wings, Marin Chapter will hold installation ceremonies for their 1970-1971 officers Tuesday in the Captain's Room of Sabella's restaurant. A no-host cocktail hour will begin at noon followed by a salad luncheon.

Mrs. Joseph Basso of Novato, will be installed as president of the Marin Chapter. To be installed with her are Mmes. Phillip Shivell of San Rafael , vice president; John Ehrmann of Novato, secretary; John Anderson of Novato, treasurer; John Brigham and Gery Gomez, both of San Anselmo, co-editors; and John Conway of Novato, delegate.

Committee chairmen are Mmes. Charles Hargraves of Tiburon, ways and means; David Graves of Novato, social; Robert Galloway of Novato, publicity; Sheldon Morris of Novato, national project; J. David Socash of San Rafael, local propect; Fred Ligarde of San Rafael, historian; Michael Woodson of Novato, recruitment; William Nay of San Rafael, programs and meetings; and John Mueller of Novato, parliamentarian.

THE SAN Rafael Junior Women's Club is having a luncheon meeting on Tuesday at West End Villa Restaurant in San Rafael. Guest of honor at the luncheon will be Mrs. Frank Verbeke, past president of the club. A social hour will start at 11:30 followed by lunch. Committee chairmen will be announced and plans will be made for the club's annual boutique, "The Tinsel Tree."

BELVEDERE — TIBURON Landmarks Society requests volunteers to staff Old St. Hilary's and help plan and arrange exhibits. The landmark and museum is open free to the public Sunday and Wednesday afternoons from April to October from 1 to 4 p.m.

A special program will be held on Wednesday at 2 p.m. on local history and botany. Botanist Mrs. George Ellman will conduct a tour of the four-acre preserve to point out the wildflowers in bloom. Mrs. David Teather, historian, is her co-chairman for the program.

Family Service League Elects New President

Mrs. Greig A. Gowdy of Mill Valley is serving as president of the Marin County Family Service League. She has been a league member for three years and previously held the office of recording secretary.

As an auxiliary of the Family Service Agency of Marin County, the league promotes and interprets the agency's activities and strengthens its work by active assistance, according to Catherine L. Gowdy.

Funds to support the FSA are raised by the league through a thrift shop in Mill Valley and the A. M. Program, a series of morning lectures. A. M. will begin its third season on Nov. 6 with actor Sebastian Cabot, and members are selling season tickets for the series.

Mrs. Gowdy says that membership in the league is open to anyone interested in family service.

The new president was born in San Diego. She attended Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash., and was graduated from the University of California with a B.A. degree in psychology. She is a research genealogist and has lived in Marin for four years.

MRS. GREIG GOWDY

Mrs. Gowdy enjoys bowling and recently won second place in the Marin County Tournament of Champions. Reading, music and her family occupy the rest of her time, she says. Her husband is an attorney, and they have two sons, Peter David, 6, and James Ryan, 22 months old.

Other league officers are Mmes. Donald Sandy, first vice president; Carlton Banigan, treasurer; Fred Burns, recording secretary; and John A. Hawkins, corresponding secretary.

Mrs. G. G. Gamlen is in charge of ticket sales for A. M., and Mrs. Curtis R. Richmond is membership chairman.

THE SUBURBAN SCENE

Marinites Racing To Tahiti

By MOLLY MARIN

Nicholas Bates of Belvedere will not be present when his brother Bink marries Sheila Jean Maley in Portland, Ore., on June 20. He will be on the high seas as part of the crew of the Numse II, San Francisco Yacht Club's contender in the world's longest yacht race: the Los Angeles to Tahiti International Yacht Race.

An all-Marin crew will be at sea 24 days on Dr. Maury Smith's yacht. The Belvedere neurosurgeon has chosen Nick Bates of Belvedere, Durk Noyes of Tiburon, Wink Smith, Jim McGinniss and Dave Hagen of Mill Valley to crew his Cal 40.

Nick and Durk will remain aboard the Numse II upon arrival at Papeete, Tahiti. The rest of the crew will fly home. Drs. Bert Richardson of Greenbrae and Jack Owsley of Sausalito will fly to Tahiti to join the crew for a cruise to American Samoa. The yacht will be shipped home and the crew will fly back to Marin the first week in August.

ADDED TO the summer calendar of parties for Marin debs is a luncheon and swimming party at the home of Mrs. Rene Vayssie in Atherton on Aug. 12. Mrs. Vayssie will honor her granddaughter, Nancy Vayssie of San Rafael.

MRS. ROSLYN C. Harris will become the bride of Francois Guillaume Leydet at her home in Kentfield tomorrow. A reception for the couple will follow in the garden at the home.

The bridegroom, a noted writer and conservationist, is the author of the Sierra Club books, "The Last Redwoods," and "Time and the River Flowing: Grand Canyon," and of many articles.

The couple plan to live in Kentfield.

MRS. JANE FORSTER of Fairfax received a surprise visit from her son, Don Forster, who is serving in the diplomatic service and has been in Vietnam for the past four years. Mr. Forster was en route to Washington, D.C., and plans to return to Marin for the month of July with his son, before he begins a new assignment in Miami.

NEW RESIDENTS of Greenbrae are Mr. and Mrs. James P. Mergens and their son, Jimmy, 16, and daughter Marilyn, 13. The family came from four years residence in Honolulu, where Mr. Mergens was director of the Aloha United Fund. He is now executive vice president of the United Bay Area Crusade.

FRED DAHL, 85, a resident of Mill Valley since 1946, is visiting his brother, Herman Dahl, 94, for a month in the village of Ostermaris on the island of Bornholm, Denmark, where both men were born. They had not seen each other in 57 years.

Mr. Dahl, who maintains his own home, has five children living, including three daughters in Marin, Mrs. Dorothy O'Brien and Mrs. Frank Hensel of Mill Valley and Mrs. Wallace Wick of Novato. He has 18 grandchildren and eight great grandchildren.

MRS. JAMES M. McKinnon of Sleepy Hollow became the bride of James Norman McLachlan of Winnepeg in an afternoon ceremony May 30 at St. Stephen's Church in Vancouver, B.C. Her daughter, Vicki McKinnon was her mother's honor attendant and Margot McLachlan was the bridesmaid.

John Sigurdsen of Vancouver served as best man and the ushers were James and Guy McLachlan. The bride's son, Bruce McKinnon, gave her in marriage.

The couple are living in Vancouver.

LIVING IN Limestone, Me., are Mr. and Mrs. Dan Steele, who were married May 11 at the chapel at Laring Air Force Base in Maine.

The bride is the former Mrs. Noella LeClere of New Brunswick, Canada. She is the mother of Lynn, Sylvia and Denise LeClere.

Dan is the son of Mrs. Emily Steele of San Anselmo and Danley A. Steele of Australia. His sisters are Mrs. Larry Ziaczewski and Mrs. William Hart, both of Napa, and Ruth Steele of San Anselmo.

THE DAN HAUSERMANS of Belvedere are very busy this week as they move their household and five of their children to their new home in Lake Tahoe and also plan the Edwardian-style wedding of their daughter, Julia, on June 21 to be held at the Mission on the University of Santa Clara campus.

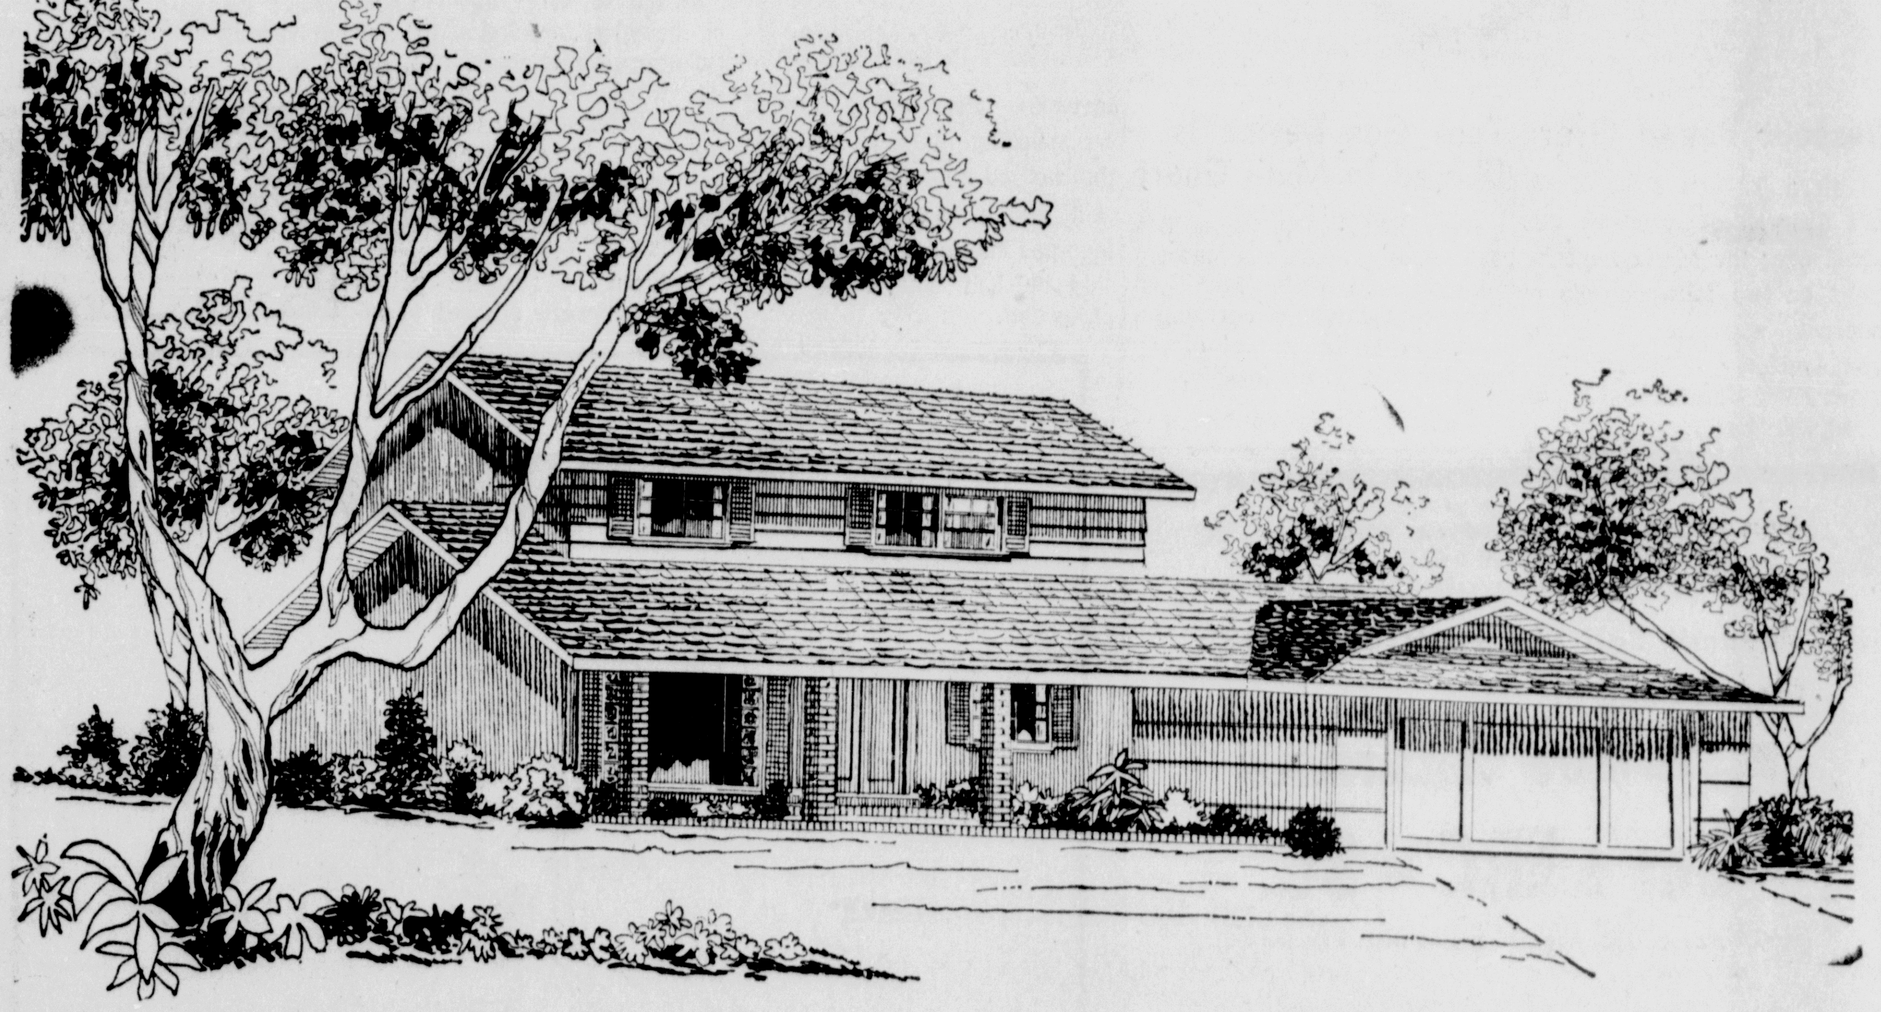
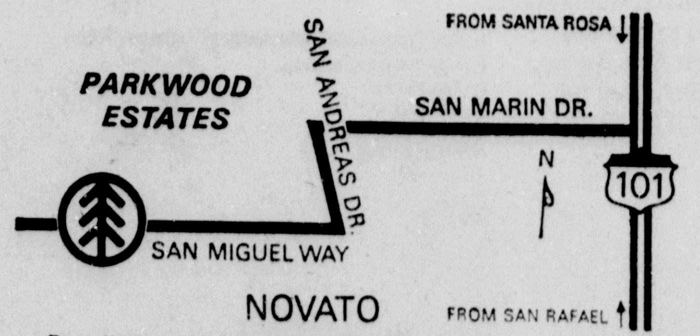
don't tell anyone what you paid for your Parkwood home in Marin

Marin County is really what it's all about. Trouble is, homes in this favorite-of-all area are apt to be costly. That's why Boise Cascade's Parkwood is a real eye-opener. Your life in Marin begins at just $29,950 by San Marin Park in Novato. And these Boise Cascade homes look like more. They live like more. You'll fall for the spacious planning, extra-care Boise Cascade craftsmanship. Fully carpeted, too! How nice it will be to say, "Yes, we're moving to Marin." Don't tell what you paid: let 'em think whatever they like. One hook, though—you'd better get on out and see Parkwood this week, while prices are still pleasantly low.



(Let 'em think you're loaded)
Financing's no problem with us.



Beautifully situated near San Marin Park in Novato. From Hiway 101, north of town, take San Marin turnoff and follow Parkwood signs. Models open daily except Wednesday. Telephone 897-6175

CIRCUS SCENES — Children of prison employees watch the show from ringside, after the warden spotted them wistfully peering from a hillside outside the fence and invited them in to join the convict audience. There were no incidents yesterday as the spectators cheered the traditional glittery acts including this trick bike performance (below).

Circus Hoopla Brightens Life For Quentin Inmates

The mood was bright as the clowns' costumes yesterday as more than 2,100 San Quentin Prison inmates filed into the athletic field bleachers to watch the circus.

Amid the laughter and bantering, one could almost forget that the spectators were wearing prisoners' blue denim and that the wall behind the circus trucks and tents was patrolled by armed guards.

The circus was the second ever held at the prison, and it included all the trimmings usually associated with the big top.

Inmates could buy hot dogs, cotton candy, snow cones and pink lemonade, which were even given away to some prisoners who could not afford to buy them. An amnesty allowed inmates to use U. S. currency, which is forbidden in the prison, as well as the normal prison canteen coupons.

More than $70 in contraband U. S. currency, used for dope traffic and other illegal trade in prisons, was taken in.

There were six animal acts, acrobats, a trapeze act, high wire performers, pretty girls and clowns in the show. Most enthusiastically received acts were the lion and tiger tamer and the high wire act, but the loudest applause came at the start of the show when inmate Vic Curcio was commended for helping bring the show to San Quentin.

Curcio, 49, originated the idea of bringing a circus to San Quentin several years ago, got the warden's permission and wrote letters to circuses until the Rudy Brothers circus agreed to put on a show last year. The same circus presented this year's program.

Children of resident prison employees were allowed to attend the circus this year for the first time, and many employees were observed both in groups by themselves and mingling and talking with the prisoners. The inmates' behavior would compare favorably with many adult-entertainment audiences on the outside.

Expressions of the crowd during the show varied from intent concentration during the more difficult performances to uproarious laughter when a clown ribbed one of the inmates during his act.

Attractive women performers brought whistles, cheers and catcalls. When a beautiful brunette appeared in the unicycle balance act, a slender baby-faced convict of about 30 breathed, "Oh man, I don't wanna look but I gotta."

Leaving after the show, the inmates walked slowly and talked little as they returned to the prison routine.

Battery Case Brings Jail And Probation

Thomas William McGrath, 56, of Tiburon, yesterday was placed on probation for two years and ordered to spend 10 days in jail by Judge Peter Allen Smith of Marin Municipal Court for a charge of battery against his wife.

McGrath was arrested March 1 after he called sheriff's deputies to say that he had tried to choke his wife. Mrs. McGrath apparently suffered only minor injuries.

Suspect Bound Over

Clifford T. Van Pelt, 52, of San Francisco, yesterday was bound over the Marin Superior Court on two felony counts of indecent exposure stemming from incidents at Stinson State Beach Park May 16. He is to be arraigned Monday.

Tear Gas Device Is Denied In Muni Court

Gary Lee Yoder, 24, of San Francisco, pleaded innocent yesterday in Marin Municipal Court to a charge of carrying a tear gas device. A preliminary hearing was set for June 30.

Yoder was arrested June 4 in Inverness after being stopped for speeding. A check revealed that he had an outstanding warrant, and a search produced a tear gas container which Yoder said he had bought for self-protection.

Nursing Alumni Blast College In Resignation

In the aftermath of the resignation of College of Marin's nursing education coordinator, the schools' nursing alumni have spelled out problems they believe led to her resignation and what the college should do to resolve them.

In a letter to John A. Grasham, superintendent-president of the college, the registered nurses' alumni association said the college was lax in letting problems arise which led Shirley Conklin to resign her post.

The association asked that "steps be taken to rectify the breakdown in communications and the . . . delay of decision.

In choosing a successor, the association urged combining all health studies program into one unit under a single administrator, and urged that the nursing faculty help choose the new head.

The two-and-a-half-year shuffle which led to Miss Conklin's resignation "seems inconceivable," wrote Barbara Bunn, president of the association.

The association questioned four aspects of the situation:

"Why the coordinator was allowed to function without a contract and . . . a defined job description for . . . one year.

"Why there is administrative controversy concerning the . . . job description.

"Why grievances have not been resolved at the proper level of the college's . . . structure.

"Why no steps have been taken to unify the various health studies, as formerly planned, into one health occupations unit."

Miss Conklin, a nationally recognized nursing educator, resigned in March, citing the uncertainty of her status as the reason.

When hired in 1964, she was to head a combined health services department, but the college later decided not to combine them. It was then proposed that Miss Conklin be placed on the faculty salary schedule instead of administrative — in effect, a downgrading of her post, with her salary to be frozen until faculty levels reached her current salary.

That proposal disappeared into the limbo of committee studies and never emerged. After more than a year, Miss Conklin submitted her resignation.

Probation, Jail Set In Family Quarrel

Robert Christie McCulla, 47, of San Francisco, yesterday was placed on probation for one year and sentenced to 15 days in jail in Marin Municipal Court on a misdemeanor charge of beating his estranged wife, Yvonne, at her San Rafael home on March 4.

Mrs. McCulla suffered a broken nose and facial cuts.

College Of Marin Trustees Face Many Meetings

Marin Junior College District trustees may spend most of their summer in meetings.

The district board has scheduled five special meetings as well as the four regular meetings during June, July and August, to complete the 1970-71 budget, discuss long-range financing, develop a financial proposal for the November election, plan the north campus site and discuss updating the district's computer equipment.

Regular meetings will be held at 8 p.m. in Olney Hall on Thursday, July 1, July 16 and Aug. 20.

Special meetings and their topics will be:

Monday at 8 p.m. — Salary proposals for 1970-71 and budgets for the art, drama and music departments.

At 8 p.m. June 22 — Long-range financing and the November ballot proposal.

At 8 p.m. June 25 — Educational concepts for the north campus.

At 8 p.m. July 6 — Computer updating.

At 8 p.m. Aug. 6 — Public hearing and adoption of the 1970-71 budget.

Place for the special meetings has not been set.

Not Very Dry

FRANKFORT, Ky. (UPI)—State Alcoholic Beverage Control agents raided three "dry" counties and turned up 4,175 cans of beer, 1,967 bottles of whisky and seven gallons of moonshine.

Sausalito Merchants Suing Over Planters

A group of Sausalito businessmen who went to court Thursday to force the Sausalito City Council to remove the sandbags on two blocks of Bridgeway went to court again yesterday to force the council to remove the planter boxes which yesterday replaced the sandbags.

Thirteen owners and operators of stores on Broadway between Anchor and Princess streets filed suit in Marin Superio Court asking for a writ of mandate to force the council to remove the planters.

They claimed that the planters are a public nuisance and are damaging their business. They also said the planters intrude into the public right-of-way.

The planters replaced the sandbags which were placed along the two blocks to enforce a parking ban along the street.

Merchants who brought the suit were Harold Hobbs, Gene Hiller, Fred Saebel, Frederick S. Mayer, Jon Waycott, Gerald Olson, Joyce M. Curry, Ruby Cullinan, Dorothy Fritter, Richard E. Mackes, Rosemary Russell, Wayne Hauner and Harold Puharich.

They are represented by attorney Gordon C. Wright of San Francisco. No hearing date on the writ has been set.

Racing Pigeons Still Missing

Three racing pigeons stolen last Sunday from a Terra Linda man were still missing yesterday.

Alfred E. Boccone of 3 Wintergreen Terrace said that two of his prize birds had been replaced in the loft from which they had been taken.

Boccone warned the thief that the pigeons are registered and cannot be easily sold.

Dance Troupe Known As Gaia Company

The Independent-Journal erred yesterday in referring to the Gaia Company Dance Theater directed by Sheri Gaia as the Sherri Gaya Dance Company.

The group will repeat a modern jazz and rock ballet interpretation of "Scarlet Letter" at 8 p.m. today at Sir Francis Drake High School's Little Theater.

HOW TO PLAY WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

How Politicking Can Pay Off With Your Bridge Plays

There is still time for shrewd politicians to get on the bandwagon. A man who can pass a low prohibiting the loss of three finesses in one hand would win any election among bridge players. He'd get the vote of today's declarer.

TRUMP ROUND

South won the first trick and drew another round of trumps. Then he led the jack of diamonds for the first losing finesse. Back came the queen of hearts, and South put up the king for a second losing finesse. And in the cool of the evening South had to try the club finesse and lost that too. Down one.

Just a minute, before you dash off to the local political club. You don't need an act of Congress to make four spades on this kind of hand. All you need is the ability to choose the right kind of diamond finesse.

LEAD FROM DUMMY

After drawing two rounds of trumps, ending in the dummy, lead a low diamond from dummy toward your jack. If East happens to have the king he must play it or lose his diamond trick. Then he can get two heart tricks, but you can cash the jack of diamonds and discard two clubs on the ace and queen of diamonds.

If West has the king of diamonds, he captures your jack. But then the defenders cannot lead through your king of hearts.

CASH DIAMONDS

If West leads a club, you put up dummy's ace and cash the high diamonds to get rid of a heart. All you can lose is one heart, one diamonds and one club.

If you want to get the bridge-playing vote, forget about finesses. Just abolish the number 1400. You might even get my vote for that one.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes.

You hold:

♥- Q J 10 9
♦- K 10 9 7
♣- K 10 5 4

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid three hearts.

You have nine points in high cards and three points for the singleton, a total of 12 points. You need 13 points for the jump to three hearts, but you might want to count 1 extra point for the queen or jack (or both) of partner's suit or for three tens or even just for luck. The jump raise is the best description of your hand.

Bridegroom Gets In Trouble Right Away

TORQUAY, England (UPI)—A judge placed Brian Weekes on two years probation when Weekes explained why he neglected to pay the hotel bill on his honeymoon.

Weekes said he had started married life with only 30 shillings in his wallet and was too proud to ask his bride for money. So he fled the hotel secretly—also leaving behind his new Missus, who took it so unkindly she has separated from him.

ALMANAC

Today is Saturday, June 13, the 164th day of 1970 with 201 to follow.

The moon is between its first quarter and full phase. The morning stars are Mercury and Saturn. The evening stars are Venus, Mars and Jupiter.

On this day in history:

In 1877 the Russo-Turkish war began.

In 1935 Jim Braddock defeated Max Baer to win the heavyweight boxing championship of the world.

In 1944 Germany began using its "buzz bomb" secret weapon on England.

In 1967 Ohio National guardsmen were called out to quell a racial uprising in Cincinnati.

A thought for the day: William Butler Yeats said, "The years like great black oxen tread the world, and God, the herdsman, goads them on behind.

Church Plans Day Camp For Bible School

The First Baptist Church of Mill Valley has abandoned the traditional two-week vacation bible school in favor of a day camp at Paradise Park, Tiburon.

Children from kindergarten age through eighth grade may register for the five-day session by attending the first class Monday at 9:30 a.m. at the park.

Parents may bring their children to the church, 285 Miller Avenue, at 9:15 each morning through next Friday for bus transportation to the camp, or take them directly to the park.

Campers should bring sack lunches. Soft drinks will be provided.

The session will end June 19 with a children's day service at 11 a.m.

A CALLING—With a Bible under his arm, Galen Craig, one of the people known around the University of California campus at Berkeley as "Jesus Freaks," attempts to interest passersby. He also is carrying a supply of religious literature which he distributes to people on the street. Girl at right holding a cross is unidentified. (AP Wirephoto)

CALLING IN BERKELEY

They Gladly Accept The Name Of 'Jesus Freaks'

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — As they put it, they've been "turned on by Jesus." And things seem different. Most of them are hippies. Others are "straight" kids. In either case, they're making their presence felt around the University of California campus here.

They're called "Jesus Freaks," a term originally applied in derision, but which they gladly accept. After all, the term, "Christian" itself originally was used in pagan mockery of the early believers in Christ.

"Jesus is back!" said a tall, barefoot, long-haired lad, handing out evangelical tracts to passing students. "Take a trip with the Lord—it's the greatest."

Here and there about the campus, on class days and weekends, it's easy to spot these special kind of radicals in clusters of youths, "rapping" about Jesus in arguments with assorted New Left advocates.

Wherever the "Jesus Freaks" hold forth, there's usually a sizable crowd. "One way! One way!" they signal about Christ, with a single finger held aloft, instead of the "V"-peace-victory sign.

Regularly, they also make forays into downtown San Francisco, displaying their signs, "Jesus Saves," and speaking on sidewalks outside the "skin" bars featuring nude dancers.

"I've been through 'grass', the heavyweight stuff, LSD and speed, and all the meditation-breathing bit, and it just freaked me out and down," said one of them, a thin, bearded young man. "But Jesus is very true, very hip, very with it. He's our thing."

Others tell similar stories of having been through drugs and Oriental mysticism before finding greater satisfaction in "following Jesus."

Formally, the "Jesus Freaks" are known as the Christian World Liberation Front. They began appearing around Berkeley about a year ago, adding a new element to a campus of 28,000 students known for its tumults and radical movements—Marxists, Maoists, Free-Speech'ers,, was resisters.

The "Jesus Freaks" also are anti-Vietnam War and generally antiestablishment, even antichurch so far as the official institutiones, claiming it has become stuffy, stiff and lost its sense of the "Spirit," the mysteries and joy.

"The straight church is too uptight," said one young man in black pullover shirt, beads and striped pants. "But Jesus is a real revolutionary, a man of the people."

There are no regularly kept statistics on the "Jesus Freaks," but estimates are that 300 to 400 of them are active here, and the number grows with frequent converts, who are channeled into Bible study groups. Those on drugs also are given medical help.

Many of them haven taken up communal-style living, in imitation of early Christians, living in groups in houses scattered about in residential areas with names such as House of Acts, Tree of Life, Fish House.

Some are disciplined communies including married couples; others are more casual, offering a young person a pad and food, along with Bible talk.

The Christian World Liberation Front maintains a two-room office near the campus, decorated with modernistic pictures of Jesus and slogans. It also publishes an underground-style newspaper, "Right On."

Several older Christians have helped shape the movement, including Dr. Jack Sparks, 40, a former Pennsylvania State University professor who came here with his family to do missionary work.

His living room regularly is crowded with young men and women for study and worship. Says he: "We pass an offering plate and tell people to put money in if they can and take it out if they need it. It always ends up empty."

Rev. John A. MacDonald of the Mill Valley First Baptist Church, who also helped spur the Berkeley evangelism, says that when a hippie accepts Christ, he "easily assumes that total wisdom floods his being."

Although he is just "a beginner, a simple babe in Christ, his mystical background tells him, 'This is it— I've arrived'. No matter what a serious-minded pastor or theologian might offer, if the young convert has a different revelation, he thinks everyone else is wrong."

He says the converted hippies have a "hard time reconciling their new outlook to what they find in the churches" and "many church members have a hard time accepting the hippies."

Baptist Church Sets Vacation Bible School

The First Baptist Church of San Rafael will begin its annual vacation Bible school Monday. It will run through June 24.

The school is open to children from 3½ to 12 years old.

The World Of God Delivered By Bottles

By KALEVI J. SAARI

HELSINKI (UPI)—Shortly after the end of World War II some Finnish religious organizations began sending "Bottled religion" to the atheist Soviet Union and its Baltic satellites. Bible messages were dropped into the Gulf of Finland with the idea they would drift to Soviet shores.

Now it appears someone else has gotten into the act. Bottles with the Word of God have been found in the Gulf that are not of Finnish origin.

INVESTIGATING

Tuomas Alhava, chief of the security police which are investigating the latest finds, said the new "bottler" probably was some central European religious organization, "operating possibly from West Germany."

Alhava's investigation began when fishermen and vacationers along Finland's south coast discovered sealed bottles containing excerpts from the Bible, including the Gospel of John, drifting in the coastal waters. The security police were alerted even though Finnish law does not forbid sending such material. Alhava agreed, however, to look into the matter. His investigators came to the conclusion the bottle-borne "mail" was non-Finnish because of the very small and unusual print used in the translations.

Alhava gave as his opinion that a foreign vessel plying traffic in the Gulf of Finland had let the bottles into the sea. The wind apparently shifted and the bottles drifted north to Finland instead of east to the Soviet Union or south to Estonia, Lithuania and Latvia.

MANY BOTTLES

The number of the bottles fished from the water along the coast was high, Alhava said, but he declined to say just how many there were.

The security police said they first learned of efforts to send "bottled religion" to the Soviet Union after World War II.

At first it was done by throwing sealed bottles into rivers flowing across the Finno-Soviet border. Unless the bottles were broken on the way, the result was certain. Later some religious organizations — Alhava does not identify them —dumped the bottles into the Gulf hoping for favorable winds. Sometimes, due to wind shifts, the bottles have ended back on the Finnish coast.

Some tourists even have tried to smuggle religious books and pamphlets into the Soviet Union, most of which are confiscated by gimlet-eyed authorities.

While Finnish officials decline to estimate the extent of such activities, periodic newspaper reports and stories by fishermen indicate the smuggling is, if not booming, still going on.

New Sermon Series Is Now Under Way

Rev. Robert H. Graham, minister of the new Orthodox Presbyterian Church, 495 San Marin Drive in Novato, has begun a new series of Sunday evening sermons on "What Presbyterians Believe." Service time is 6 p.m.

Also Graham is currently devoting his Sunday morning sermons to a discussion of the Beatitudes, with the concluding one June 21.

Baptist Funds Off

VALLEY FORGE, Pa. (UPI) —The American Baptist Convention reports income for its Mission Budget for the first three months of 1970 totaled $3427,476, or 87.6 per cent of the goal, and a drop of $186,659 from income for the corresponding period of 1969.

RABBI MORTON HOFFMAN

A Reformist To Israel

By LARRY MOWELL

Rabbi Morton Hoffman of Congregation Rodef Sholom in Santa Venetia might have moved to Israel sooner if it weren't for his religious beliefs.

It sounds strange that a rabbi would have trouble finding a job in the homeland of the Jews, but Hoffman, a reform rabbi, said there are not many jobs for reform rabbis in Israel during an interview Tuesday on the front stoop of his Terra Linda home.

Hoffman, who said, "We always had the feeling that it would be nice to take a crack at it (living in Israel)," left Wednesday for a job as a counselor to immigrants in Haifa, Israel.

"I think I accomplished everything that I could reasonably hope to accomplish in 13 years here," the rabbi said.

That is an understatement. Hoffman, 43, came to Marin in 1957, only four years after his ordination, to take over a fledgling congregation of about 100 young families that had no facilities of its own, only rented space at the old Jewish Community Center on Mission Street in San Rafael.

He said his primary responsibility was to build and he did. More than $300,000 was raised to build a modern religious sanctuary and classroom complex at 170 North San Pedro Road.

The sanctuary was completed in May 1962, and 13 classrooms were added in November 1965.

The rabbi preferred to spend his time in the classroom section. "I look upon myself primarily as an educator and teacher. I relish the role of teacher the most," he said.

RABBI HOFFMAN
A new career

He leaves a congregation of about 400 families and 500 students in Judaism and Hebrew for his successor, Rabbi David Davis of New York City. Davis will assume his duties Aug. 1, but Hoffman will be busy in his new job by then.

Hoffman will be general director of a new center aimed at settling American and Canadian students who want to live and work in Israel.

"My job is to talk their language and help them with that big adjustment problem," he said. Hoffman said he looks forward to his work even though he will have no rabbinical duties.

The rabbi said the work will not be strange to him because he took many psychology and counseling courses while working for his masters degree and ordination at Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Asked why he wants to move to Israel permanently, he said, "I've always been close to Israeli affairs."

Hoffman has made five visits to Israel. He went there first in 1959 to marry his wife, Aviva, an Israeli he met at the University of California. He spent nine months there in 1965 and 1966 on sabbatical leave and went most recently last July and August on a special fact-finding trip with other prominent rabbis.

Hoffman qualifies as a prominent rabbi because he was president of Board of Rabbis of Northern California from 1967 to last year.

His experience as president, he said, was probably the key factor in his decision to emigrate.

During his terms, the hot feud with the Arab nations surrounding Israel boiled over into the six-day war and he had to maintain maximum support in the Bay Area, he said.

That meant an extensive speaking schedule and close relationships with the Israeli consulate in San Francisco, he said.

It was one of these officials with whom Hoffman developed "a profoundly close man-to-man relationship" who found a job for the rabbi who complained he would not be able to find a suitable job in the Jewish homeland.

Hoffman's reform Judaism is not officially sanctioned in Israel, he said, but he sticks by it. "We (the reformers) simply feel that religion in order to survive has to change with the times," he said.

At the Santa Venetia synagogue he held family services once a month. In Israel, men must worship alone as they have done for centuries, he said.

He also called for changes in prayers which still refer to animal sacrifice. "This is totally irrelevant," he said.

"You find some rabbis that are more worried about whether a certain pan is kosher than they are about a soul going down the drain," he charged.

He said he places lives above dogma, but is not against tradition. "I try to look to see what I can retain that is still meaningful, but where it has to be changed, it has to be changed. That's all," he explained.

Hoffman was an active worker in spheres other than religion. One of the founders of the Marin Human Rights Commission in 1963, he was also active in a movement to save Biafran children, the Bay Area Crusade, the boy scouts and the Clergy Advisory Board of Planned Parenthood Association of Marin County.

His new home is not too close to the fighting, he said, so he probably won't be involved in any fighting, but his record in Marin indicates he will participate in almost everything else.

"I'm sure I'll be gettng involved because it's my way to get involved. I'm socially oriented," he said.

PULPIT GUEST — Dr. Carl Segerhammar, president of the Pacific Southwest Synod of the Lutheran Church in America of which Faith Lutheran Church of San Rafael is a member, will be guest speaker at the 10 a.m. service tomorrow. A fellowship hour will follow where he will conduct a question and answer period.

Baha'i's Set Special Race Unity Day Event

The Baha'i Communities in Marin will observe Race Unity Day tomorrow with a meeting beginning at 1 p.m. at Isabel Cook School in San Anselmo.

Moderating a panel discussion on "Education for Diversity" will be Elizabeth Gibson.

Mrs. Gibson, a member of the Baha'i's since 1963, is active in radio and television writing.

Novato Youth Named To Synod Commission

Curtis Barton, member of Grace Lutheran Church in Novato, has been named to the Youth Committee of the California-Nevada District of the Lutheran Church — Missouri Synod.

Curtis was one of over 50 candidates for seven positions on the youth committee, which plans a significant youth activities for the 220 member congregations of the district.

The committee also interprets and responds to the place of youth in the church, the feelings and attitudes of youth toward the church, and the church's role in community affairs and issues.

Barton, 17, is president of the Senior High youth group at Grace, and its representative on the church council. A senior at San Marin High School next fall, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Barton of 6 Denise Court in Novato.

Theme For Bible School Announced

"Go Tell Your World," is the theme of the Central Assembly of God Vacation Bible School which opens on Monday. It will continue through June 24.

Classes, 9 a.m. to noon, will be held at the church which is located at 517 D Street in San Rafael.

Nuns Seek $6,000 For Ruining Tree

MT. ANGEL, Ore. (UPI)—An order of nuns has sued two college students for $6,000 for trimming branches from the top of a 90-year-old sequoia tree.

The Benedictine Sisters of Mt. Angel brought the suit because, they said, the trimming ruined the symetry of the tree, one of the tallest sequoias in Oregon.

Firestone To Union Board

BERKELEY (AP) —Leonard K. Firestone of Los Angeles, president of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. of California has been named a trustee of Berkeley Graduate Theological Union.

The Union, which has 1,000 students studying Protestant, Catholic and Jewish theologies, is adjacent to the University of California at Berkeley but not a part of U.C.

In announcing appointment of Firestone, a spokesman for the Union said an effort was being made to broaden the governing board membership and encourage ecumenical efforts.

Ministry For Deaf

WINNIPEG (UPI)—A new cooperative ministry for the deaf will be initiated at schools for the deaf in Milton and Bellevue, Ont., this summer, says the Lutheran Church of Canada. The project is a joint effort of the Luthern Church of Canada and the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod.

Goofy's Funny View Of Life From The Portside

By JIM MURRAY

On the first tee, the Cal baseball coach George Wolfman surveyed his hands dubiously before picking up a club. "I dunno," he complained. "Look at all them blisters."

Off to one side, the tall, spare figure with the gray around the temples asked dryly: "Shall I call an ambulance?"

The coach had just been brushed back by one of the most genuine species of that uniquely American sporting type — the left-hander.

You know the Disney character Goofy the Dog? Well, THAT'S Vernon Louis Gomez. Lefty got the funny view of the world you only get from the portside. He looks as gloomy as a Sunday in Budapest but he puts the world on like it was a .220 hitter with a bad habit.

Lefty used to say he was the getaway driver for the baseball dynasty known as Murderers' Row. Ruth, Gehrig, Ruppert, McCarthy, Lazzeri, DiMaggio, Dickey are hazy legends to us but they are just guys who hogged the shower or messed up the double-play to Vernon (Lefty) Gomez.

They called him "Goofy" for the same reason they call the village idiot "Einstein." To be sure, there was the time when the real Einstein sat across the railroad car from him and the newspaperman asked Lefty if he knew who Einstein was. "He invented electricity. His hair hasn't come down yet," Lefty said, adding, "I got an invention, too."

The newsman was intrigued. "Yeah," said Lefty. "It's a revolving fish bowl. It's for tropical fish who are lazy."

Lefty consolidated his reputation by pausing in the middle of an afternoon once to look up and watch an airplane go overhead. What made this notable was that it was also the middle of the World Series, the bases were loaded and the tying run was at the plate. Moreover, Gomez was on the pitcher's mound.

Lefty was one of the game's greatest pitchers. He holds the World Series record for most victories without a defeat, 6-0. He won 189 major league games, four times a 20-game winner but his droll recollections would seem to suggest his nickname should have been "Gopher" Gomez.

"I made a star outta Joe DiMaggio," he likes to boast. "They didn't know he could go back on a ball till I took up pitching. I never saw the front of his uniform for four seasons."

The first time he faced the A's slugger, Jimmie Foxx, catcher Bill Dickey came out to ask "Do you know what to do with this guy?" Gomez answered, dead-pan: "Yeah, a fast ball, then run like hell over to back up third base." Another time, Foxx came to bat and Gomez shook off all Dickey's signals. Dickey approached. "All right, what do you want to throw him?" "Let's wait a minute, maybe he'll get a long distance call."

He was so skinny he claimed it staggered him to put his cap on and he often complained he could stand underneath the shower and not get wet. "I didn't cast a shadow till I was 25 years old. I had to put the bat down three times and rest on the way to the plate from the dugout." He scored one whole run in 1936 but he ran wild in 1933, scoring three. "It's a good thing. If it wasn't for me, they never would have got those Yankees out."

Far from giving him an inferiority complex, Lefty was on first base one day when Babe Ruth came to bat and Lefty called time and walked down to Ruth. "You gonna bunt me over?" he asked. He claimed that Al Simmons hit a ball so far off him one day that, by the time it came down, the league president was different from the one with his name on the ball. Someone asked him if he ever pitched batting practice and Vernon answered "Yeah. But not on purpose."

The press was kind to Lefty because he was kind to them.

DOWN TO DEFEAT

Nancy Richey of San Angelo, Tex. slipped in more ways than one as she lost her Wightman Cup match to Mrs. Ann Jones of Britain in yesterday's opening play at Wimbledon, England. The win gave Britain a 2-1 lead, but the U.S. tie it up this morning when Julie Heldman of New York defeated Joyce Williams. Key match today was between Billie Jean King of Berkeley, a winner yesterday, and Mrs. Jones.

Giant Rookie Loses Debut, Wins Admirers

St. Louis Defeats Pitlock

By JOE SARGIS

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Maybe, Bob Gibson thought, he should stop warming up before a game.

Friday night against the San Francisco Giants he had trouble warming up before the game in the St. Louis Bullpen because of a stiff breeze,

So, he quit and went to the bench.

A little more than two hours later he was in the clubhouse with a five-hit, 4-1 victory over the Giants.

Gibson went the distance for the fourth time in his last five starts, struck out eight batters and walked only two as he improved his record to 7-3.

HELPS SELF

Big Bob helped himself with a booming homer to center, his first of the year and 16th in the big leagues.

Rookie southpaw Lee Pitlock, who only three years ago watched Gibson pitch from the stands, was the famed St. Louis righthander's starting opponent Friday night.

Pitlock, who posted a 10-3 record at Phoenix before being called up earlier in the week, showed a lot of promise in the five innings he worked. Only Gibson's homer and a long sacrifice fly to dead center by Carl Taylor were well hit off the youngster, who was the victim of the wind and slow fielding.

WINDY DOUBLES

Wind blown doubles by Lou Brock and Jose Cardenal, a wild pitch and Taylor's sac fly helped the Cards to two runs off Pitlock in the first and Gibson hit his homer in the second for a 3-0 lead.

The Cards scored their fourth run in the third the hard way. Pitlock walked Cardenal and then balked him to second. An infield out moved Cardenal to third but a moment later he was trapped off third on a smash to second by Joe Torre. The Giants finally tagged Cardenal out with Torre racing to second from whence he scored on a single by Julian Javier.

Giants manager Charlie Fox and pitching Coach Larry Jansen were pleased with what Pitlock showed them. Both expected a live fast ball but Pitlock also revealed a fine curve, which he threw eight times for strikes.

LOT OF POISE

"He looks like a good one to me," said Jansen. "He showed a lot of poise for a youngster, which is something we all look for."

The Giants scored their lone run off Gibson in the seventh. Tito Fuentes opened the inning with a single, his second hit, and Hal Lanier walked. Then Gibson, while standing on the rubber, had the ball fall out of his hand for a balk, which moved Fuentes to third. He scored as pinchhitter John Stephenson grounded out to deep short.

PRESSURE MAN — Arnold Palmer, shown en route to a round of 69, will be pressuring Western Open leader Hugh Royer in final two rounds.

(UPI Telephoto)

Pressure-Cooker Buildup For Western Open Leader

By ED SAINSBURY

CHICAGO (UPI) —Hugh Royer could find out today about pressure on a golf course.

The 33-year-old Columbus, Ga., pro missed Beverly Country Club's record by one stroke Friday with a 65, six under par, and grabbed the lead at the midway point of the Western Open with a 36-hole total of 132, 10 under par.

His four-stroke margin over his closest challengers equalled the largest at the midway point on the pro tour this year, previously attained by Grier Jones at the Monsanto Open, but Jones couldn't hold on to win that one. Today could answer the question whether Royer can hold on to win the Western's first prize money of $26,000.

Tourney-tested Bobby Nichols, a former PGA champion, and Arnold Palmer, victor in 55 pro tournies, were closest to Royer. Each had rounds of 67 and 69 for their 136 total.

SOME PROBLEMS

Today Royer will play the 6,923-yard Beverly links with Palmer and he'll have all the problems posed by Arnie's Army when they bust through the ropes, block the line of sight to the green and generally make conditions tougher for Palmer's playing partner.

The showdown, if Royer can stand up to the pressure, should be one of the features of the network televising of the event. Nichols will be playing with Johnny Pott, one of the five players tied at 137, five strokes behind, in the next to the last twosome.

The other late pairings, all involving 137 shooters, will be Tom Weiskopf and Tom Shaw, and Don Bies and Dow Finsterwald.

TIES RECORD

Royer played his best competitive round ever in posting his 65 and he tied the course record for the back nine with a five under par 30. He could have been better, but on the fourth hole he hit three times into trees and had to settle for a double bogey six.

Palmer could have been closer too, but when a rain storm threatened while he was eight under par, he three putted to bogey the 15th hole. Then, after an hour and nine minute delay because of the storm, he three putted the 17th to fall back into the deadlock with Nichols. Thus, he bogeyed two of the last four holes.

The field found the course easier Friday and 39 players broke the par of 71 while 20 more equalled it. But only 10 players were under par on both rounds.

The field was cut to 81 players, the low 70 scorers and ties, for both the third and fourth rounds with those who shot 146 or higher eliminated.

THE SPORTING GENTRY

Teen Fairfax Girl Sets Sights On Olympic Swim

By RALPH CHATOIAN

Broad-shouldered, slim and well-tanned, Robin Bachrach of Fairfax looks every bit a speedy swimmer. And she is.

She's 15 now and stands 5-foot-9. It's hard to realize she's the same little Pixie-like girl who at 12, broke a national Amateur Athletic Union record at the Marin County Swimming Championships. But then that wide, bright smile says yes, it's the same gal.

She's still winning events in age group swimming, but her mind is on bigger things these days. Say as big as the 1972 Olympics.

She got as far as the qualfying meet for the Olympics in 1968 when she was 13, in the 100-meter butterfly. Her time of 1:09 wasn't good enough to make the Olympic field, but next time she tries for the big show she'll be 17, wiser and stronger.

"I'll probably have to be down to about 1:05 to make the Olympics," she said. That's cutting off a lot of time. "Yes, it's quite a lot," she said with a far away look in her eyes, perhaps thinking of Munich, Germany, site of the '72 Olympics.

ROBIN BACHRACH
Ambitious swimmer

When she was 14, she won a gold medal in the 100-meter fly in her age group at the National Junior Olympics in Knoxville, Tenn.

She is at the stage in swimming where she can use age group swimming as practice, saving the really all-out efforts for senior events, competing against the best in our country, as well as some of the top international stars.

HAWAII MEET

Next big one for Robin, a junior at Drake High School, will be the Keo Nakama Invitational in Honolulu, June 25-27. After staying in Hawaii long enough to compete in an age group meet July 1 through 4, she plans to get back to the Bay Area in time for the Santa Clara International Invitational, July 10-12, which will draw some of the top stars of the swim racing world.

She feels she is just starting to get into form for the swim season, since being slowed most of the winter by colds and the flu.

Her specialties are the 100 and 200-meter fly and 100 and

'MUDCAT' SCORES AGAIN

Card Castoff Saves A's

BALTIMORE (UPI) —Jim "Mudcat" Grant has a right to be puzzled about the straight cash deal which axed him from the St. Louis Cardinals roster before the start of the 1970 season.

The Oakland A's, however, aren't asking any questions. They benefitted from another helping of Grant's sterling relief work Friday night in an 11-inning, 4-2 win over Baltimore.

Grant has allowed only four earned runs this year for a dazzling earned run mark of 0.82, with two wins, no losses and eight saves.

MAINLY STARTER

The 34-year-old righthander has been in the major leagues since 1958, mainly as a starting pitcher. He spent six years with Cleveland and four with Minnesota before going to the National League Los Angeles Dodgers in 1968. He split last season between Montreal and St. Louis.

Grant fired four innings of scoreless ball Friday night and helped win his own game with a sacrifice bunt.

Dick Green started the 11th by being hit by a pitch from the Orioles' Eddie Watt. Green was sacrificed to second by Grant and came home on Campy Campaneris' double to break a prolonged 2-2 tie. Reggie Jackson then doubled home the final run of the contest.

A'S HOMERS

Campaneris slugged the first pitch of the game out of the ballpark for his fifth homer. Rick Monday followed moments later with another bases empty blast, also his fifth, against Baltimore starter Tom Phoebus.

Oakland's Rollie Fingers held the Orioles in check until Clay Dalrymple and Don Buford tied the game with homers in the sixth. Grant came on in the eighth, though Fingers allowed only three hits in seven innings.

The victory was Oakland's seventh in nine games and kept the club within six games of first place Minnesota in the American League West.

Pirate's No-Hitter Gets Big Assist By Mazeroski

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Dock Ellis is big and wild and fast.

Yet in only his third season of major league baseball he's knocking at the Hall of Fame.

Ellis, 25, a Los Angeles native, pitched the first no-hit game of the season Friday night when he turned back the San Diego Padres 2-0.

His no-hitter was preserved in the seventh inning when second baseman Bill Mazeroski made a diving catch of Ramon Webster's liner. The run-scoring department was taken care of nicely by Willie Stargell who hit two homers.

Ellis was his usual wild self. He walked eight men and hit one. He struck out six. It was not exactly a classic no-hitter. He retired the side in order only in the second, seventh and ninth innings. The Padres had runners on first and second via walks in the first, fifth and sixth innings.

The no-hitter was the first game of a twinight doubleheader. In the second game, the Padres grabbed a 5-2 victory. Southpaw Danny Coombs pitched only the second complete game of his eight-year career, Al Ferrara hit a homer and a single and Nate Colbert got a pair of triples.

When Webster hit his hazardous liner in the seventh of the first game Pirate catcher Jerry May said, "I thought it was a hit."

Mazeroski dove to his right, landed on his belly and caught the ball before it hit the dirt.

EASIEST GAME

"That was one heck of a play," said May. The catcher said, "It was the easiest game I've ever caught. I didn't feel any pressure until the ninth."

Ellis, a 6 foot 3 inch 200-pounder felt pressure all right.

"I didn't think I had good enough stuff to throw a no-hitter," he said afterwards. "I thought about the no-hitter from the fourth inning. I know guys who don't want to talk about it but if you're going to throw it, you're going to throw it. I was nervous in the ninth but I was trying to relax."

Walking so many batters didn't bother him, he said. "The ball I was throwing was moving and I was keeping the ball away from the hitters," he said.

The Padres stole three bases but that didn't matter either.

"My main problem ever since I've been pitching is holding men on, he said.

Tackle Ron Mix Still Undecided

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Offensive tackle Ron Mix said recently he still is undecided on whether he will end his retirement and play for the Oakland Raiders.

Mix, 31, an all-leaguer most of his 10 seasons with the San Diego Chargers, was traded last week to the Raiders for two future draft choices. The deal depends upon his decision to play.

Mix told a meeting of sportswriters and sportscasters that he has talked with Al Davis, Oakland managing owner, in "general terms" — mainly about his physical condition. He missed most of the 1969 season with a pulled hamstring muscle before announcing his retirement last December.

Star playmaker of Michigan State's 1969-70 basketball team was 5-foot-5 guard Gary Ganakas, son of the head Sartan coach, Gus Ganakas.

Too many women stiffen their legs when they bowl (look at the illustration today). To bowl to your potential loosen those leg and knee joints as you approach the foul line.

Lotz Second In Winnings

NEW YORK (AP) — Dick Lotz, winner of the Kemper Open last Sunday, climbed one notch to second place this week in pro golf's money-winning standings.

Lotz' $30,000 purse at Kemper boosted his 1970 winnings to $105,951, behind Lee Trevino's leading $109,583 figure this year. Gary Player, who has returned to his home in South Africa, slipped to third with $88,078.

Bob Lunn was fourth with $72,968 and Miller Barber, fifth with $71,906.

Rounding out the top ten were, Billy Casper, with $69,483; Frank Beard, $68,292; Homero Blancas, $67,711; Dave Hill, $67,581 and Jack Nicklaus, $66,329.

Hub City Women's Tennis Team Wins

Four doubles teams of the San Anselmo Women's Tennis Club breezed through straight set victories over the DuPont Park team from San Francisco Thursday on the losers' court.

Winners in the Bay Area Tennis League match for San Anselmo were Mesdames Tom Sullivan-Joe Marquez, 6-1, 6-0; John Cann-Ken Kopp, 6-1, 6-2; Richard Shaler-Lawrence Gapinski, 6-4, 6-1; Frank DeMoss-Ron Sanchez, 6-1, 6-2.

A Yankee Record

NEW YORK (UPI)—The New York Yankees set the record for the most runs scored in one World Series game when they beat the New York Giants, 18-4 during the 1936 post-season classic.

Once, when he was at bat and the team was trailing, the manager gave him the "take" sign all the way. The bat was just a prop. If it left his shoulder, it was a $100 fine. Lefty walked. The next day, the papers reported "Lefty Gomez's keen eye ignited a Yankee rally." Another time, in the last inning of a Series game, with two on, the hitter smashed a vicious liner at second baseman Tony Lazzeri's chest. Lazzeri grabbed it and doubled a runner to end the game. "Gomez got the last man by forcing him into a double play," the reporters wrote. Says Lefty: "Lazzeri coughed for six weeks."

When the Back Bay rich boy from Harvard, Charlie Devens, showed up to pitch for the Yankees, he came into camp with a steamer trunk with glamorous labels, "Biarritz," "Adlon Hotel," "Monte Carlo," "Nice," 'The Ritz" and "Athens" on it. Left surveyed this for a minute. "You ever been to the Robert Treat in Newark?" he asked Devens. Devens shook his head. "You better leave some place on that trunk for it. You will," Lefty told him. The Yankees' minor league farm was Newark those days.

One of Lefty's last capers involved bringing a lantern to bat against Bob Feller one dark, rainy game. "Knock it off. You can see Feller," snapped the umpire. "I just wanna make damn sure Feller can see ME!" retorted Vernon.

In the Series game against the Giants' rookie pitcher Cliff Melton who, Lefty said, had ears that "looked like a taxi with the doors open," Lefty called time in an early inning to complain that Melton's ears were making a bad background for the hitters to hit against. He recommended painting them green.

Lefty has returned to his native California now and is now living in Fairfax. He thinks the players today are not better but smarter. "They asked us once how we managed to pitch that altitude in Denver, and I told the guy I usually walk him." Now 60, he still keeps a wary eye out for the righthanded world which he sure is out to get him. Someone asked him if he thought his Series record, six games won with no defeats, would stand up. Lefty thought a moment. "Well," he said, "I don't think I'm gonna lose any."

Brazilian Ref Cleared Of World Soccer Charge

MEXICO CITY (UPI)—The International Football Federation (FIFA) Friday ruled that Mexico, despite appeals, must play its World Soccer Cup quarterfinal Sunday at a tiny provencial steadium instead of massive Aztec Stadium.

The Federation also cleared Brazilian referee Airton Vieira De Moraes of bribery allegations.

Mexico lost the draw for the right to remain in Mexico City with Russia getting the privilege. Both teams had tied on points and goals for leadership of group I. The winning team has the right to remain at the original site of group play while the runnerup has to travel.

News that Mexico had lost out and had to travel to Toluca, 65 miles northwest of Mexico City, to play Italy before 29,360 fans caused dismay in local soccer circles.

TRAFFIC PROBLEMS

Officials hastened to point out to the FIFA that "massive traffic and other problems" would be caused by the Mexican trip. Italy agreed to Mexico's appeal for a switch, provided the game was played Monday instead of Sunday. Italy and Mexico both asked for the semifinal to be put back one day from June 17.

But the FIFA spokesman said the executive committee refused to make the change because "Toluca has been chosen as a quarterfinal site long ago." The spokesman said measures would be taken to ease the traffic jams in the area of Toluca's Sosal Arena.

The executive committee also closed the case of allegations of bribery against De Moraes. FIFA, in an official statement, said their investigations showed that De Moraes "at no time made financial demands on Uruguayan or Swedish football association officials" as alleged in "malicious rumors."

A CONVERSATION

In fact, said FIFA, the investigation revealed the rumors "originated from a conversation between Swedish journalists and a journalist from Brazil who could not subsequently be identified."

De Moraes was plucked from officiating at the Sweden-Uruguay game June 10 by FIFA President, Sir Stanley Rous, a few hours before kickoff. He denied the allegations and FIFA said Sir Stanley showed "the fullest confidence in his integrity by appointing him to officiate at other matches . . . the matter should now be considered closed."

The eight quarterfinalists worked on their strategy Friday in preparation for Sunday's matches.

Russia plays Uruguay in Mexico City, Italy plays Mexico at Toluca, Brazil meets Puer at Guadalajara and England takes on West Germany at Leon.

Giants Sign Draft Pick

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

SAN FRANCISCO — The San Francisco Giants have signed Kyle Hypes, a 19-year-old southpaw pitcher chosen in the third round of the free agent draft.

Hypes, who was 10-0 with Santana High School near San Diego, will be assigned to Great Falls, Mont., of the Pioneer League.

Tennis

BRISTOL, England — Rod Laver came from behind last night to beat fellow Australian professional Owen Davidson, 4-6, 6-2, 8-6 to enter the men's singles finals of the Wills $25,000 Open Lawn Tennis Championships. Laver goes in the finals today against Nikki Pilic of Yugoslava, who won a semifinals victory over Australia's John Newcombe, 4-6, 14-12, 8-6.

In the women's singles finals, Margaret Court of Australia defeated France's Francoise Durr, 6-1, 6-1.

BRISTOL, England — Pancho Gonzales, last year's Wimbledon hero when he won a five hour marathon match from Charlie Parasell, Santurce, P.R., has decided to skip the All-England tennis championships, which start June 22.

The 42-year-old Gonzales believes two weeks of intense competition is now too much for him, his agent John McDonald said yesterday, adding, "Consequently I have asked the Wimbledon referee to withdraw his name."

Baseball

LOS ANGELES — Chicago Cubs centerfielder Cleo James was hospitalized last night with a fractured cheekbone. He was injured when hit by a ball while warming up with a teammate in the outfield between innings during last night's game against the Dodgers. It was not known how long he would be sidelined.

MARY BACON
Becomes a mudder

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Cardinals sent southpaw pitcher Santiago Guzon to their Tulsa AAA farm club for the second time this season yesterday. He appeared in only 13 innings with an ERA of 7.61 and a won-lost record of 1-1.

ATHENS, Ohio — Bob Wren, Ohio University baseball coach, has been named NCAA district four baseball coach of the year by the NCAA baseball coaches committee after leading his team to a 31-4 season and the Mid-American Conference title.

Horse Racing

MIAMI — Mary Bacon yesterday asked racing stewards at Tropical Park for an extension of her apprentice jockey allowance. The pretty 20-year-old wife of jockey Johnie Dale Bacon claims she is entitled to a three week extension to make up for riding time lost when she was pregnant last winter. Her apprentice allowance expires July 21.

Hockey

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League yesterday traded right wing George Swarbrick to the Philadelphia Flyers for defenseman Terry Ball.

Ball, 26, played in 61 games with the Flyers, scoring 25 points on seven goals and 18 assists. Swarbrick played most of last season with the Penguins' Baltimore Clipper farm team in the AHL.

Golf

SUTTON, Mass. — Favorites Kathy Whitworth and Shirley Englehorn share the lead at the halfway mark of the $30,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association Championship at Pleasant Valley Country Club. Miss Englehorn, who has won her last three outings, shot her second straight 70 yesterday to tie her with Miss Whitworth, a loser in her last seven tournaments.

Yachting

STAMFORD, Conn. — Crews for Valiant, Heritage and Intrepid began preparing today for America's Cup observation trials that begin on July 7 off Newport, R.I. The three yachts, competing for the right to be the America's Cup defender against either France or Australia in September, finished preliminary shakedown trials Friday, during which Valiant and Intrepid each had four victories. Heritage, a late arrival from Florida, lost both her outings.

General

SAN FRANCISCO — Douglas A. Fessenden, retired chairman of the physical education department at San Francisco State and former University of Montana football coach, died Thursday following a brief illness at the age of 69. He served at S.F. state from 1953 to 1966, during which time the school's varsity sports improved considerably among small college ranks.

Bowling

PORTLAND, Ore. — Butch Gearhart of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., rolled a six-game series of 1,336 last night to lead 15 others into today's finals of the $32,000 Portland Open bowling tournament.

Gearhart, who almost withdrew because of an injured toe on his left foot, ran his four round total to 5,310, seven pins better than veteran Dave Soutar of Gilroy, Calif. Soutar had led Gearhart by 10 points after the third round yesterday afternoon.

USC Has Back To Wall After NCAA Setback

OMAHA, Neb. (UPI) —The Southern California Trojans had their backs to the wall as the 24th annual NCAA College World Series went into its second day today.

The Trojans, ranked first in the nation going into the playoffs, were defeated Friday night by the fourth-rated Ohio University Bobcats, (32-4) who put on an all-around display of solid play in getting past the favored team, 4-1.

Southern California (47-13) must defeat Delaware (22-5) in today's contest to stay alive in the double-elimination meet. Texas, No. 2 in the country at 37-6, blasted Delaware, 12-4, Friday night in the opening game of the series.

Ed Robbins, a hard-throwing right hander who is now undefeated in 14 games, held the Trojans to two hits during the seven innings he pitched. His reliever, Ed Raushch, allowed only one safe blow during his two-inning stint.

The Bobcats slammed nine safeties off the combined offerings of Jim Barr and Brent Strom, the two aces of the Trojan staff.

Raider Fullback Has High Hopes

OAKLAND (UPI) —The Oakland Raiders were pro football's winningest football team during the regular season in 1969.

Yet they suffered from inconsistency at the fullback spot, where injury-ridden Hewritt Dixon dropped off drastically from his superb rushing and receiving years of 1967-68.

"I'm looking forward to returning to my 1967-68 form," Dixon said yesterday, "As far as I'm concerned I'm 100 per cent healthy."

Dixon will have to contend with second year pro Marv Hubbard who explains bluntly, "I want the job. I want to be right up there in league rushing...in the top ten."

Ex-Card Hurler Pierotti Dies

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Funeral arrangements are pending for Adolph "Babe" Pierotti, a San Francisco resident who appeared briefly in the major leagues with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Pierotti collapsed and died at the age of 70 of an apparent heart seizure Thursday during a round of golf.

He played several years in the Cardinals' system before becoming a St. Louis scout under Branch Rickey.

ROBIN

400-meter individual medley events.

FIRST TRIP

Although a very serious swimming competitor, she is also a teen-age girl and it comes out loud and clear when you ask if she's looking forward for the Hawaii trip, her first time to the Islands.

"I hope I get a chance to surf," she bubbled. "My swim coach (Art Octavio of San Francisco) was raised on the Islands and I've heard so much about them."

Robin learned to swim at the ripe old age of 3 and by the time she was 8 was swimming like a fish. Larry Lack, then coaching the San Rafael Swim Club, and also serving as recreation life guard at the San Rafael High School pool, saw this little fish-like creature swimming below him and immediately called her over.

How would you like to come out for the team? asked Lack, and her days of competitive swimming were under way.

SWITCHED CLUBS

After swimming for the San Rafael Swim Club a couple of years, she switched to the Marin Pirates which later became the Marin Swim Club. When coach Art Octavio and Marin S.C. came to a parting of the ways, some of the swimmers went with him and formed the Dolphins of Marin. That is the club in which Robin now belongs. With about 20 swimmers on the team, it is one of the smaller Marin clubs.

Robin's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Bachrach, have two other daughters, both in their 30s.

Miss Bachrach, who is continuing in competitive swimming "because I like it, because I feel it is fun," practices twice a day, about an hour in the mornings and two hours in the afternoons, and works with weight exercises.

So keep your eye on Robin, a girl that started breaking national age group records at 10. She's getting even better.

Will Peripheral Canal Help Or Damage The Delta?

When the Chinese coolies labored a century ago to raise the levees which created the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta area as we know it today, little could they imagine what it would lead to.

Today's battle over whether or not to build the Peripheral Canal is not likely to end soon.

Don Pinkerton, an unsuccessful candidate for Republican nomination for state senate from the district which includes Marin, mentioned the Peripheral Canal from time to time in his campaign. Most of his Marin listeners didn't know what he was talking about.

Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan and his administration support the project which was the brainchild of the administration of Democrat Pat Brown, when he was governor.

Jesse Unruh, Democratic candidate for governor against Reagan, stands four square against the plan.

We are likely to hear much more about it as the Reagan-Unruh campaign develops.

DESCRIBED IN THE SIMPLEST possible terms, the Peripheral Canal would be a huge concrete riverbed constructed around the heart of the Delta area to carry water from the Secramento River to a pumping station at Tracy where it would be sent south by canal for use agriculturally in the southern San Joaquin Valley and domestically in southern California.

It would cost an estimated $200 million to build and would be financed jointly by state and federal funds.

It has always been envisioned as a key link in the California water plan approved by voters in a statewide election about a decade ago.

UNRUH AND SEN. JOHN Nejedly of Contra Costa County have introduced a measure in the Legislature at Sacramento to block construction of the Peripheral Canal. In Washington, Congressman Jerome Waldie, also of Contra Costa, is battling against congressional approval of the project.

Southern California representatives at Sacramento and Washington presumably will be battling just as hard for approval. Governor Reagan and his administration — including Secretary Norman B. Livermore Jr., of the California Resources Agency — are among the most outspoken proponents.

PRESSURE GROUPS INVOLVED include the Sierra Club and other conservation groups who support the status quo and oppose change in the Delta; fish and game groups who would like to see existing fisheries and waterfowl hunting areas protected and improved, and recreational boaters who want to keep the Delta open for small craft navigation.

In simplest terms, those who oppose the Peripheral Canal say it would reduce the flow of fresh water in Delta waterways thereby raising the level of pollution, destroy fisheries, impair waterfowl habitat and interfere with small craft navigation. The threat of salt water intrusion from increased tidal action is also voiced early and often.

Supporters of the project point out that it would provide nine outlets for inrefusing fresh water into Delta waterways including some sloughs that now are stagnant habitat would be improved, pollution decreased and attractiveness to boaters enhanced. Salt water intrusion, say proponents, is not a threat at all.

Supplying surplus northern water to areas that need it is an important and worthwhile reason to go ahead.

THERE YOU HAVE IT.

It comes down to a question of whom do you believe. Both sides can produce mountains of study data to back up their respective contentions.

One important study is not yet complete. It is the one in progress at the Corps of Engineers Bay Model in Sausalito. When its results are known, they may shed more light on the situation.

It is a good bet that the Bay Model study report will be roundly applauded by those whose position it seems to support and vehemently denounced by those from whose position it seems to detract.

WHEN YOU HEAR cries of anguish about possible threats to the balance of nature, you can enjoy a good chuckle in the knowledge that the delta as we know it is the product of man, in the form of the Chinese coolie of the 19th Century.

Natural fishery?

The striped bass is not a native of the West Coast. It was imported by man a couple of generations ago.

Livermore recently commented to a Marin audience that all water development projects are NOT necessarily bad. One might expand that idea and conclude that all of man's meddling with nature isn't bad.

Bully for the Chinese coolies who built the delta levees and bully for the man who brought the first striped bass to Northern California.

Bouquets And Brickbats

A BOUQUET to Sears Roebuck for ending years of rumors with a public announcement of the firm intention to build a full-size store in Marin — at Northgate.

A BOUQUET to Petaluma Police Chief Larry D. Higgins for continuing his efforts to promote personal contacts between citizens and police by way of his programs to get patrolmen out of cars and onto the sidewalk as well as offering "ride along" invitations to citizens to accompany patrolmen in police cars.

BRICKBATS to acting county planning director Albert Solnit for telling planning commissioners that operations of the $400,000 per year department would fall apart if he couldn't get one new typewriter and a new copying machine. The organization of that department has got to be in deplorable shape if it is so close to collapse — on a $400,000 a year budget.

A BOUQUET to the Miwok Archeological Preserve Committee of Marin for its efforts to preserve an Indian mound at Marinwood. "May its tribe increase" — the MAPCM's tribe, that is.

A BOUQUET to the California Toll Bridge Authority for promising a toll reduction on the Richmond-San Rafael bridge effective July 1.

The reduction should have come sooner and it should be more than the contemplated 10 cents, but better late and little than never.

The Work Of Summer

For Marinites who garden, summer is the time of most work and most reward — especially in the vegetable line.

A goodly portion of the summer garden work is watering. In this no-rain summer clime watering is an absolute must.

Some plants, such as hydrangeas and fuchsias, require almost daily libations. Lawns require much water.

In this small area we must be thankful. Not every place in California has such an abundance of water. But even here it is a finite resource.

This summer, as we water, we will think how very lucky we were not to have been born nomadic tribesmen in the harsh, dry reaches of the Sahara.

Make Sears Point More Popular Spot

This letter is to try and keep Sears Point Raceway from being sold to a land developer. This area needs more people like India does. Our roads and towns are already crowded, and more people would only cause over crowding and more pollution. What this area does need is more recreation for the young and young at heart. The equipment is available, but the owners aren't.

The loss of revenue at Sears Point may be attributed to three main reasons. (1) Poor management by Filmways, (2) not enough races for the small guy, (3) and high prices. Six to eight races a year are certainly not enough to help finance an investment like Sears Point. The money will come from small guys who would like to race on weekends and not from a few big names for people to come to see. If Fremont Drag Strip can run a weekly program such as they do, why can't Sears Point? . . .

Filmways should hire a small permanent staff for weekly events at Sears Point. Then they should get several doctors that are more civic minded than mercenary, to be at trackside. Private concessions could be hired on a percentage basis. For such races as grandprix and road racing, the SCCA (Sports Car Club of America), (who sponsors most of those races) provides personnel on a voluntary basis to help the track. Clean up wouldn't be so bad if there were more disposal units. Also, if there were more races open to the small guy, then the increased revenue could absorb the cost of maintenance.

If this process can work profitably in other areas, why not here? . . .

For the amount of money invested in Sears Point, and the number of auto and motorcycle enthusiasts in this area, don't you think that these ideas are at least worth a try? You, as the editor of this paper, have a lot of power and could be a moving force in getting Filmways to reconsider selling Sears Point . . . I would be willing to help in the organization of such an effort, and I would certainly hate to see such an opportunity like this go down the drain . . .

Omissions Charged In Classroom Issue

The spate of letters recently in defense of the present method of handling American Government classes at Drake High School are interesting not in content, but in what is purposely left out.

Mr. Lim carefully avoided mentioning that of the long list of "opposite view" speakers he supposedly has presented his classes, at least three-fourths of them did not appear before the American Government class first period this last school year. Who refuted the statement to students by the hippy that there is nothing in the Bible against adultery? Who refuted the Gay Liberation member's statement that 90 per cent of the students would have homosexual tendencies? Who refuted Mr. Lim's statement to his class that he fully expected to teach in the nude within five years — to nude classes?

A course in American Government is required so that our youngsters may know at least as much as the foreign born becoming citizens. . . .

Some of our teachers receive over $14,000 per year in salary to teach American Government. Would the citizens, parents and taxpayers willingly pay this amount to someone arranging for controversial speakers rather than imparting the required necessary material?

Student Answers Writer's Charges

I would like to comment on the letter, "A New Low in Our Sick Society," written by Judy Emis and published May 21. In that letter Mrs. Emis claims that in Roger T. Lim's American Government class (A) no textbook is followed, (B) that there is no flag salute, (C) that a member of the Gay Liberation Front, a homosexual, was allowed to speak of his "marriages" to other men, and also (D) that cans of beer are openly consumed in class.

I would like to answer Mrs. Emis's charges.

(A) Mr. Lim does not use a textbook because there is no adequate textbook readily available. Textbooks supplied to him are either out-of-date, or they do not meet Mr. Lim's high standards.

(B) State law requires "a patriotic observance" at the beginning of the school day, not specifically a salute to the flag. The study of American Government is a highly patriotic function in itself.

(C) A member of the Gay Liberation Front did speak briefly to Mr. Lim's American Government students, LAST OCTOBER. Perhaps the man said more than was expected. When Mr. Lim, or any teacher, turns the floor over to a speaker, he has little or no control over what that person might say.

Mr. Lim has people come in to lecture from both sides of the platform, so to speak. Political parties, anti-war organizations, groups supporting the Administration, all have a fair chance to present their views. And most certainly the students have a voice in chooisng speakers.

(D) Never at any time has beer been consumed in Mr. Lim's American Government class, nor any other of his classes. This is a gross untruth.

Mr. Lim is an excellent and highly qualified instructor in the field of Social Studies. His perfect record is, and will continue to be, unmarred by false charges brought against him by a frustrated group of muckrakers, Mrs. Emis included.

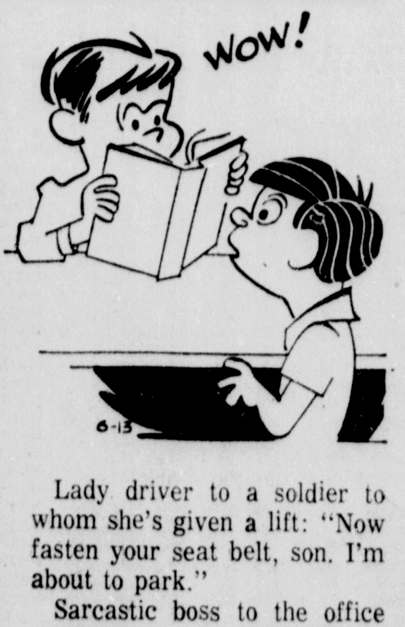
A MINNEAPOLIS librarian's attention was drawn to a little boy who wandered over to the "Books in Foreign Language," rack and picked up a French edition of the famous story, "The Three Bears." He carefully scanned the familiar pictures, puzzled briefly over the text, then called excitedly to his companion, "Hey, look at this! A book written in BEAR language!"

OVERHEARD:

Waiter at a ski resort: "I think you've had enough to drink, sir. You're pitching woo at our stuffed polar bear."

At a midtown bar: "How's for trying one of our new Jet cocktails? Two of 'em and you can't remember what your Namath!"



Lady driver to a soldier to whom she's given a lift: "Now fasten your seat belt, son. I'm about to park."

Sarcastic boss to the office wolf: "Who was that blonde I saw you outfit last night?"

Learning About Prisoners One Of Indochina War Frustrations

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In frustration and sheer despair no aspect of the Indochina War compares with the plight of the 1,400 or more Americans missing in action and their wives and families. Some wives have gone four — even five — years without knowing whether their husbands are dead or alive.

EFFORTS TO EXPLOIT this grief for the larger objectives of America's dilemma in the war have from time to time seemed to put the families of these hapless men in a political role. There is no evidence that this has been by choice of the wives. They have wanted to get, by any means possible, at the very least, word of the fate of their husbands.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., introduced an amendment to the military appropriations bill that was the most open invitation thus far to tie a political issue to the plight of the prisoners. As a counter to the Cooper-Church amendment he proposed that any legislative restrictions on the president's right to order future military operations in Cambodia would be forbidden so long as American prisoners were held in Cambodia.

The Dole amendment was defeated, 54 to 36, with 15 Republicans joining 39 Democrats to vote against it. One reason was the conviction that the amendment did make the captives pawns in a political byplay.

REPEATED ATTEMPTS by a variety of means to get information about the prisoners have brought only minimum results. A number of wives have gone to Paris and other European capitals to put their case to Communist representatives. While in most instances they have been received politely, they have been told nothing.

On the Meet the Press program Sweden's Prime Minister Olof Palme was pressed hard to say what he had been able to do through North Vietnamese representatives in Stockholm about the prisoners of war. Palme said that of 60 appeals put up to him he had received replies in 14 cases. Among the latter were the names of several men whose fate had already been made known.

The Prime Minister said that he wanted to avoid making the prisoners a political issue and keep it on the humanitarian plane. hanoi is a signatory of the covenant of the International Red Cross covering the treatment of prisoners of war. But the North Vietnamese government holds that the men they have taken are war criminals and, therefore, not subject to the terms of the covenant. The fact that the United States has never formally declared war is at least a technical consideration in the status of these victims of the long conflict.

IT GOES, HOWEVER, much deeper than that. Individual human life has nothing like the same value in Asia that it has in the West. And the ruthless drive of the doctrinaire Communist adds an extra dimension to this difference in values. Then, too, there is the deep bitterness generated by thes uffering of the civilian population from long years of bombing in the two Vietnams. The last is part of the fearful heritage that peace is not likely soon to erase.

State Department officials who talked with Palme were impressed by his sincerity and by the realism of his efforts to get more information out of Hanoi. Under the prisoners-of-war convention Sweden could propose the interment until the end of the war of sick and wounded men. Given the adamant stand of Hanoi, that seems a remote possibility. The grim reality appears to be that these unfortunate men will not be released, granted they have survived the rigors of their captivity, until there is a negotiated peace.

THE MOST SPECTACULAR effort to improve their condition and discover whether they were living or dead came from H. Ross Perot, the Texas billionaire. Just before Christmas he was turned back attempting to deliver canned Christmas dinners to 1,400 prisoners. An attempt to deliver the dinners and other gifts for the captives by way of the Soviet Union was also frustrated when Perot was denied permission to fly to Moscow.

How Not To Make Peace With Member Of Women's Liberation

WASHINGTON — The Women's Liberation people take themselves very seriously and well they might. It's very hard to say anything to them without getting them very mad. While I have no idea what you should say to someone in Women's Lib, here are some of the things you should not say:

"WELL NOW THAT you've got your college degree, I suppose you're going to find yourself a husband."

"You ought to meet Hugh Hefner — he's your kind of guy."

"How do you like this picture of the sexy girl in a bathing suit?"

"Have you heard the latest one about the woman driver who . . ."

"What's the name of your hairdresser?"

"I suppose if you take this job, you'll probably become pregnant."

"YOU WOMEN GO IN the other room. We'll stay here for cigars and cognac."

"Wouldn't you hate to be married to a man who makes as much money as you do?"

"Here, let me light your cigarette for you."

"For a woman, you play very well."

"My mother always did something stupid like that herself."

"There's a gal in our office who is as good at selling as any man."

"Hey look, there's a lady taxi driver!"

"WE'D BE HAPPY to let you in the press box — it's just that we don't have any lavatory facilities."

"Ha, ha, ha . . . A woman President, that's a good one. Ho, ho, ho."

"Would you like to go out to Lady's Day at the ball park?"

"The thing I like about you the best is your legs."

"I met this woman doctor the other day, at the hospital, and she really seemed to know what she was doing."

"What do you think about when you're having a baby?"

"I beg your pardon, ma'am, is the head of the house home?"

"Would you like to feel my muscle?"

"SHOW ME A WOMAN who really likes working and I'll show you a woman who likes other women."

"A penny for your thoughts."

"Hi, how's the better half feeling?"

"Don't feel bad, I even know men who don't understand it."

"No, sit down and join us. We have nothing important to say."

"The newspaper just arrived. Would you like the women's page?"

"Listen, I'm the first one to admit women have gotten a raw deal, but the majority of them wouldn't have it any other way."

"Meet me at the lady's entrance of the club at 5 o'clock."

ANY OF THE ABOVE statements can cause a Women's Lib backer to get uptight, but if you really want to see her climb the wall start singing:

"You've come a long way, baby,

"To get where you got to today.

"You've got your own cigarette now baby,

"You've come a long, long way."

WEEK IN BUSINESS

Liquidity Bugaboos Worrying Big Firms

By ROBERT J. REGAN

NEW YORK (UPI) — The revolving stage of economic troubles turned the corporate liquidity problem toward stage center this week as the spotlight fell on Penn Central Co.'s financial difficulties.

Simply stated, liquidity is a measure of the ability of a company to raise enough cash to meet debts as they mature. More important than the cash, or short-term investment that can be easily converted to cash, is its relationship to the debts that have to be paid off.

The top-level shakeup at Penn Central, which saw Stuart T. Saunders replaced as chairman and chief executive officer by Paul A. Gorman plus a number of other high level changes, came less than two weeks after the Pennsy withdrew an unsuccessful $100 million debenture offering. The accompanying prospectus had disclosed the road has to pay off $106 million in maturing long-term debt this year, plus another $75 million of commercial paper maturing before June 30.

Anxious to prevent any repercussions the Pennsy's troubles might spread throughout the financial community, the Nixon administration quickly fashioned a rescue plan that apparently is heading for difficulty on Capitol Hill.

The plan involves Defense Department guarantee of bank loans of up to $200 million for the road, plus a Transportation Department bill that would provide $750 million for the ailing Pennsy and other roads in financial difficulties. Scattered, but potent opposition in Congress suggested this may be a drawn-out affair.

Ling-Temco-Vought, which has been selling off subsidiaries to alleviate its liquidity problems, this week got a clear track to proceed with its acquisition of Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp., the only major steel producer to report a net loss for the first quarter of 1970.

Federal Judge Louis Rosenburg in Pittsburgh consented to the merger after extracting a guarantee from LTV that the conglommerate would make no changes in the steel company's employee pension or other benefit funds without approval of the Justice Department.

The Reading Co., with liquidity problems of its own, has asked the Interstate Commerce

Commission to approve deferment of payment of $8 million on outstanding indebtedness, due in $2 million chunks on July 1, 1970 through 1973. The railroad also has asked its bondholders to ease terms of mortgage security in order to provide more working capital.

In another development, an ICC examiner cleared the proposed merger of the Illinois Central and the Gulf, Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The examiner said the merger, which now requires full ICC approval, would save the roads $10.8 million a year.

Economy through merger was one of the principal reasons for the kingsized merger (effective July 1) of Francis I. DuPont and Co. and Hirsch and Co. The combination, which takes place simultaneously with the merger of DuPont and Glore Forgan Staats and Co., will create the world's second largest brokerage firm.

Another Wall Street merger appeared to be in the wind with talks said to be nearing completion between Thompson and McKinnon Auchinloss Inc. and Blair and Co.

Over in the copper industry, long-standing combinations of producers and fabricators came under fire in an antitrust suit filed against five large integrated companies by Triangle Industries Inc. of Neward, N.J.

The company filed suit seeking treble damages against Kennecott Copper Corp., Phelps Dodge Corp., Anaconda Co., Cerro Corp., and American Smelting and Refining Co.

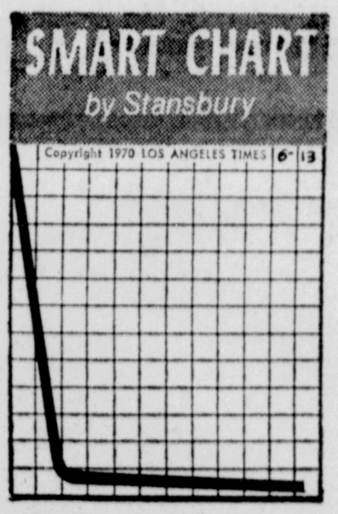
Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., which this week set price increases of 5 to 6 per cent on tires and tubes for the replacement market, found itself in an unexpected race with the B. V. Goodrich Co. for control of a large Dutch tire manufacturer, N. V. Rubberfabriek Vredestein.

In May, Vredestein agreed to issue and sell to Goodyear new shares equal to a controlling interest. Goodrich on Thursday disclosed it had been buying Vredestein stock quietly on the open market. Goodyear, which said it believes Goodrich's holdings are near the 50 per cent mark, set plans to take the matter to court in The Neatherlands.

Goodyear's tire price hikes are expected to be followed by other tire producers.

Deflation hit the stock market this week, letting out some of the buoyancy from an earlier six-session runup that carried the Dow Jones industrial average about 83 points higher.

Most of the business news was of the summer stock variety and traders spent more time reading the billboards than buying.



"Well, nobody really expects to sell at the top."

Tomales High Elects New Officers

Kirk Furlong of Tomales was elected student body president yesterday at Tomales High School.

Furlong, and other officers elected yesterday, will serve during the fall semester.

He received 105 votes to the 12 polled by Samuel Stipanov of Bodega Bay. There were 170 students registered to vote.

Daniel Thornton of Tomales, with 93 votes, defeated Linda Napoli of Marshall, with 30, for vice president. Jo Anne Damazio was elected secretary and Elaine Zetterquist reelected treasurer. The two Point Reyes Station girls were unopposed.

Betty Colbert defeated Beth Melekian, both of Inverness, by a 74-39 margin for the position of spirit and rally commissioner.

All of the cheerleader and pom-pon girl candidates received the 50-vote minimum required for election.

The cheerleaders are Linda Tremari of Bloomfield, Janice Kehoe of Inverness, Ramona Sartori of Tomales, and Beccy Anderson and Robin Noblett, both of Dillons Beach.

Pom-pon girls are Donna Tremari of Bloomfield, Betty Colbert and Elena Storer, both of Inverness, and Debbi Riley, Pam Poiani and Noel Simas, all of Point Reyes Station.

Mobile Home Tax Bill Hearing Set

I-J Special Report

SACRAMENTO — The Assembly Revenue and Taxation Committee is scheduled Tuesday to hear testimony on a bill that would eliminate in lieu taxes on mobile homes and place them under the property tax system provided for regular homes.

The legislation, killed by the Legislature in recent years, is sponsored by Assemblyman Eugene Chappie, R-Cool.

The Marin County Board of Supervisors, which has observed widespread growth of mobile homes in the county, is on record in favor of such a bill.

Chappie has accused Dennis Kavanagh, a lobbyist for the Golden State Mobile Homeowners League, of distributing "false and misleading" information on the measure.

"I am getting sick and tired of this line being fed to mobile home owners by Mr. Kavanagh," Chappie said in a statement. "His claims that taxes will rise on mobile homes, in particular for senior citizens, is not true."

Under his bill (AB 1765) Chappie said, a senior citizen living in a $3,000 mobile home would pay no tax after receiving the $750 homeowners' exemption. If Gov. Ronald Regan's tax package passes, he added, a senior-citizen owner of a mobile home valued at up to $4,000 would also pay no tax because the governor's package calls for an increase in the homeowners' exemption to $1,000.

Chappie said he introduced the bill at the request of many mobile home owners in the Mother Lode counties he represents. He said they were "tired of being called second-class citizens" and wanted the same exemptions entitled regular home owners.

BCDC Alternates Allowed In Competing Legislation

I-J Special Report

SACRAMENTO — Legislation that would enable members of the San Francisco Bay Conservartion and Development Commission to designate alternates was under consideration in the Senate today.

The bill, AB 1771 by Assemblyman John Dunlap, D-Vallejo, is designed to restore the proxy system of membership deleted from 1969 legislation which gave BCDC formal powers. The measure cleared the Assembly and is before the Senate Governmental Organization Committee.

It would require that proxy members be approved by BCDC but does not set any membership qualifications.

Under a bill by Sen. John F. McCarthy, R-San Rafael, however, alternates would be required to posses the same qualifications held by the appointed member. Most of the members of the commission are city councilmen or county supervisors.

McCarthy's bill, SB 1110, is also before the Governmental Organization Committee.

Assembly Passes Ban On Bay Oil Drilling

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A bill extending the state oil drilling ban to coastal and bay waters of nine Bay Area counties and Del Norte County was approved 62-0 by the Assembly Friday.

Assemblyman William T. Bagley, R-San Rafael, said his bill fills in all remaining Northern California gaps in present state offshore oil sanctuaries. It does not affect federal waters beyond the three-mile limit of state jurisdiction.

Tape Player Stolen

A $210 tape player, tapes and case were stolen from an auto belonging to Robert M. Sartorio and parked at his home, 275 Canal Street, Apt. 8, between 10:30 p.m. Wednesday and 6:30 a.m. Thursday, San Rafael police reported yesterday.

Bay Agency Urged To Buy 1.5 Million Acres Space

BERKELEY (AP) — The San Francisco Bay Area needs a regional agency to acquire and preserve about 1.5 million acres of open space, says a University of California government expert.

The nine-county agency should be elected and charged with halting urban sprawl, says T. J. Kent Jr. in an 85-page report for the UC Institute of Governmental Studies issued Thursday. It would be the first agency of its kind in the nation, he says.

The agency should acquire 1,460,000 acres of land for recreation, agriculture and other nonurban purposes, the report urges. Public open space now amounts to about 340,000 acres in the Bay Area.

Kent says, "There is a compelling need now to gain control of the Bay Area's sprawling growth and to begin governing the region to protect and make secure the environmental future of the human metropolis that man has built in the nine-county Bay Area."

Total purchase price of the land at today's prices would be about $2 billion, says Kent.

Repayment of a 30-year bond issue for this would cost about $10 annually for every Bay Area resident, and "looking back from the year 2000, a 1970 purchase at this price should represent a bargain comparable to the Dutch purchase of Manhattan Island for $24 in 1626," he added.

"If such measures are not taken," he warns, "suburban sprawl and the automobile (could) win the next and perhaps final round in the development battle now taking place in the outer ring of the Bay Area."

The new agency could be one of the first departments of a limited regional government or a permanent independent commission, he says.

Either way, he insists, it is essential for the agency to have the solid legal and political base of direct election.

"The commission's duties will bring it into head-on collision with the postwar pro-sprawl forces of suburban land development, including the state Division of Highways and the powerful combination of interest it seems to serve primarily," Kent states.

One of the agency's first steps he said, should be to impose a two-year moratorium on expansion of cities and suburbs in those areas considered vital to the future open space system.

Kent, 53, founded the Department of City and Regional Planning at Berkeley. He is president of the American Society of Planning Officials.

A Solution To The Junk Auto

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (AP) — A two-month experiment by General Motors Corp. in the vicinity of the northern Michigan resort of Traverse City may provide a solution to the problem of removing abandoned cars from rural areas.

The vehicles create eyesores on the countryside.

For the next eight weeks, GM, in cooperation with its five dealerships in the area, will remove free of charge any automobiles abandoned within 20 miles of Traverse City.

Roger M. Kyes, executive vice president of GM, said the test is to learn whether the company's program for removing abandoned autos is economically feasible.

Company officials estimate there may be 2,000 to 3,000 junked cars within the test area.

The plan calls for anyone owning or spotting an abandoned car to call a company dealer with details.

Everything we learned in 17 years of building fine homes went into American Housing Guild at Lucas Valley.

We believe these magnificent new homes are, by far, the most significant values in Marin today—in space, livability, craftsmanship, location & features, like the unique conversation pit above. 1-level & 2-story homes with 3, 4, 5 & 6 bedrooms. To see furnished models, go north on Hwy. 101 to San Rafael, ½ mile beyond Terra Linda Turn-off; left on Lucas Valley Rd. Follow signs. 479-1761. American Housing Guild

As a home owner at Lucas Valley, you enjoy automatic membership in the beautiful Lucas Valley Community Center.

Located nearby, the center is regarded as one of the finest of its kind. It provides many recreation facilities for you and your family. There is an over-sized swimming pool with surrounding grass areas for sunning, a children's wading pool, play yard, jungle gym, swings, sand box, slides, and much, much more. And the lovely tree-studded Lucas Valley Creek along the perimeter of American Housing Guild's Lucas Valley homes is there to be enjoyed in all seasons.

Wally Cox—His Bag Is Nature

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—"The polliwogs are plentiful in the little creek right now," said Wally Cox, the humorous man who is a regular on the panel of "The Hollywood Squares."

It's fitting in this time of ecological awareness that Wally speaks up. He has been a flower and bird watcher most of his life.

HIS BAG is nature. All wildlife, flora and fauna alike, has been his passion. While other performers swim and ski or play golf or tennis, Wally tramps the Hollywood Hills and the Santa Monica Mountains, discovering streams and canyons untouched by man.

He lives just off Mulholland Drive high in the hills in a rustic, artistic house that once consisted of five rooms. He has knocked out walls and reduced his home to three rooms: bedroom, kitchen-living room and a combination sitting room-writing room.

A secretive fellow, presumably for his own good reasons, Wally is married but keeps his wife's name to himself.

NEITHER WILL he discuss his offspring by a previous marriage.

This is his third marriage and he says it is a very happy one. Both he and Mrs. Cox are first-rate cooks. His friends are often invited to the house for Chicken Wally, frozen chicken seasoned and wrapped in foil to bake. He also cooks pork chops in beer.

A man of no pretensions, Wally works only one day a week, reporting to NBC for "The Hollywood Squares" at 6 p.m. and working until 11 p.m.—taping all five shows one after the other.

THE REST of the week he devotes to looking for work—television guest shots, movies.

His most recent film assignment is in Disney's "I'll Trade an Elk," in which Wally plays one of his favorite types, an incompetent assistant to a shady character.

Cox is working on a television special of his own, "Wally Cox's Los Angeles." He is doing all the photography himself.

"THERE WON'T be any buildings, cars, billboards or works of men in it," the actor explained. "It will consist of flowers, birds, trees, mountains, greenery and running water, all within the city limits."

WALLY COX
A secretive but happy man

Every other day he tramps the fields and hills, sometimes without his camera.

Cox and Marlon Brando, friends since childhood, see each other often, although Brando doesn't share Wally's joy for field and stream.

THEY DO agree about clothes. Wally dresses as casually as possible. He has worn the same suit on the television show for four years. The other (he has only two) is seldom worn. For variety he wears different neckties, choosing among the four he owns.

When Mr. and Mrs. Cox entertain at home the party is usually restricted to a half dozen guests. Any more than that, he feels, eliminates the possibility of good conversation.

For kicks Wally rides a motorcycle. Slowly. He has no plans to enter races with such speed burners as Steve McQueen.

FOR SEVERAL years Cox made his home in Connecticut, but now he is a hard and fast Californian.

"I'm happier than I have ever been," he says. "I have a sense of community, belonging, living in one place permanently."

THE PLEA

Nothing in years
    Has touched me as much
As the Doctor's plea
    For Leukemia research;
My face is wet—
    It is flooded with tears;
I lived thru this heartache
    For several years
And finally faced
    My greatest loss.
Not enough research
    May have been the cause;
Enclosed is my check
    With a prayer for sure
That endless effort
    Will find a cure

SAN RAFAEL — MRS. MANNY CERF

ON THE BAY

Geese, flying high, strung across the sky,
Dark beads, against the faded blue
Of a tattered Hippie shirt.
Sail, all becalmed, waiting patiently,
For a breeze . . . a hundred brides,
Seeking a bridegroom who seems to desert.

The city, a monstrous monopoly game,
Cut from cardboard, awaiting unseen players
Behind a curtain of fog.
The gulls, in a doleful chorus,
Screaming relentlessly, always off key—
Reality's unpleasant epilogue.

GREENBRAE — GLORY PALM CARLBERG

The Last Survivor Of A Proud People

See Page M4

WITH ALL the vigor and enthusiasm of teen-agers, Howard and June Embury enjoy a spin on their bicycles. Mrs. Embury, whose appearance and spirit belie her nearly 60 years, has spent much of her life in the physical culture and health food fields. Her husband, formerly in construction, is new to the health food business since his wife opened San Rafael Health Foods in June of 1966. But now he is as much an enthusiast as she is. And he has left his former profession to join his wife in the full-time management of their thriving health food business. (Photo by Alfred M. Arn)

Good Health Is June Embury's Business

It's Also The Secret Of Her Youthful Looks Approaching 60

One's first impression of blonde, statuesque June Embury, San Rafael business woman and Kentfield housewife, is that she is probably in her late 40s, but looks somewhat younger because she has taken good care of herself.

A skin clear and free of wrinkles, eyes that sparkle, a vitality that a teen-ager would envy all contribute to the impression of youth.

Then as she tells you of her eventful life, she happens to mention that in 1934, when she was chosen "National Health Girl" of the USA, she was 23 years old.

WHICH MEANS that June Embury is not far short of the observance of her 60th birthday, all appearances to the contrary.

A handsome, dynamic woman, she stands behind the counter as the best single advertisement for the wares dispensed by her small but bustling business, San Rafael Health Foods at 1132 Fourth Street in downtown San Rafael.

But before her involvement in the booming health food field and before her coming to Marin, June Embury had lived an eventful, not always easy past.

SHE WAS BORN in Antwerp, Belgium, as June van Couwenberghe and was a tot of but 3 when the Germans invaded her native country in 1914.

Her earliest memories are of four years spent under the harsh, sometimes terrifying, conditions of German occupation.

Her father, a Belgian soldier, was wounded early in the war. He escaped capture as Belgium fell before the invaders only by fleeing, first to Holland, then to England, and eventually on to America where he made his home in New Jersey and found work on a tugboat.

Van Couwenberghe had been forced to leave his wife and daughter behind in Antwerp.

SMALL CHILD though she was, June recalls vividly today the hours spent in the cellar with her mother sitting out the Allied bombing attacks upon the German-occupied city and area.

She remembers, too, the two arrests of her mother by the Germans -- and her subsequent release. The first was for mocking the Germans' military goose-step in public, the second for appearing attired in the Belgian national colors at a German army parade.

She has painful memories as well of the worsening food system that was not relieved until final Allied victory.

"BY THE WAR'S end the ration had been reduced to black bread and buttermilk, and only when these were available," she says. "No doubt my later preoccupation with nutrition had its roots in those times."

In 1919 Van Couwenberghe was able to bring his wife and daughter to the United States where he had started a new life. June grew up in New Jersey, and became an ardent physical culturist in her late teens.

In her early 20s she was a devoted follower of the internationally-known Bernarr McFadden, a pioneer figure in America in the vigorous exercise and good diet for sound health field. It was through her association with the MacFadden movement that she was named the country's "National Health Girl" in 1934.

SHORTLY thereafter June found herself selling health foods throughout a country that was then considerably less nutrition-conscious than it is today.

And eventually she settled in San Francisco and opened that city's first "juice bar," an establishment that squeezed fresh fruit and vegetable juices for the refreshment of the tired office workers of the downtown and financial districts.

So successful was this enterprise that she opened two more juice bars.

But with marriage and the arrival of two children, she retired from business to rear her family in the Kentfield home.

BY THE MID-1960s, her two sons had been graduated from the University of California at Berkeley and her first marriage had ended in divorce. She was now married to Howard Embury, a carpenter-foreman with Ralph E. Murphy & Sons in San Rafael. And with her boundless energy she was eager to get back into the business world, preferably into the health food field in which she had pioneered and which was now experiencing a surge of public interest.

She recalls now with much amusement how husband Howard belittled the idea. To him, the people who ate health foods were fanatics and faddists who lived on raw fruits and vegetables, preferably exotic, and expensive, plants from faraway.

"My rebuttal," she says, "was that many of the people interested in health foods were not fanatics at all, but sensibly concerned over the cost they were paying in lost nutrition for some of the convenient, easily-prepared processed foods of the supermarket."

SHE POINTED to the many articles then appearing in magazines and newspapers creating a growing consumer awareness of the problem.

It was agreed, then, that June Embury would open a small health foods store somewhere in Marin.

The hunt for a good location ended in the leasing of space at 1132 Fourth Street, and the opening, in June of 1966, of the San Rafael Health Foods.

June at first ran the store alone with husband Howard helping at night after the completion of his carpentry work.

TODAY SAN Rafael Health Foods employs six, the youngest of them hard put to match the energy of the proprietress. And the always busy premises were recently expanded to include the adjacent store to the west, thus doubling the display space.

June Embury says her philosophy is this:

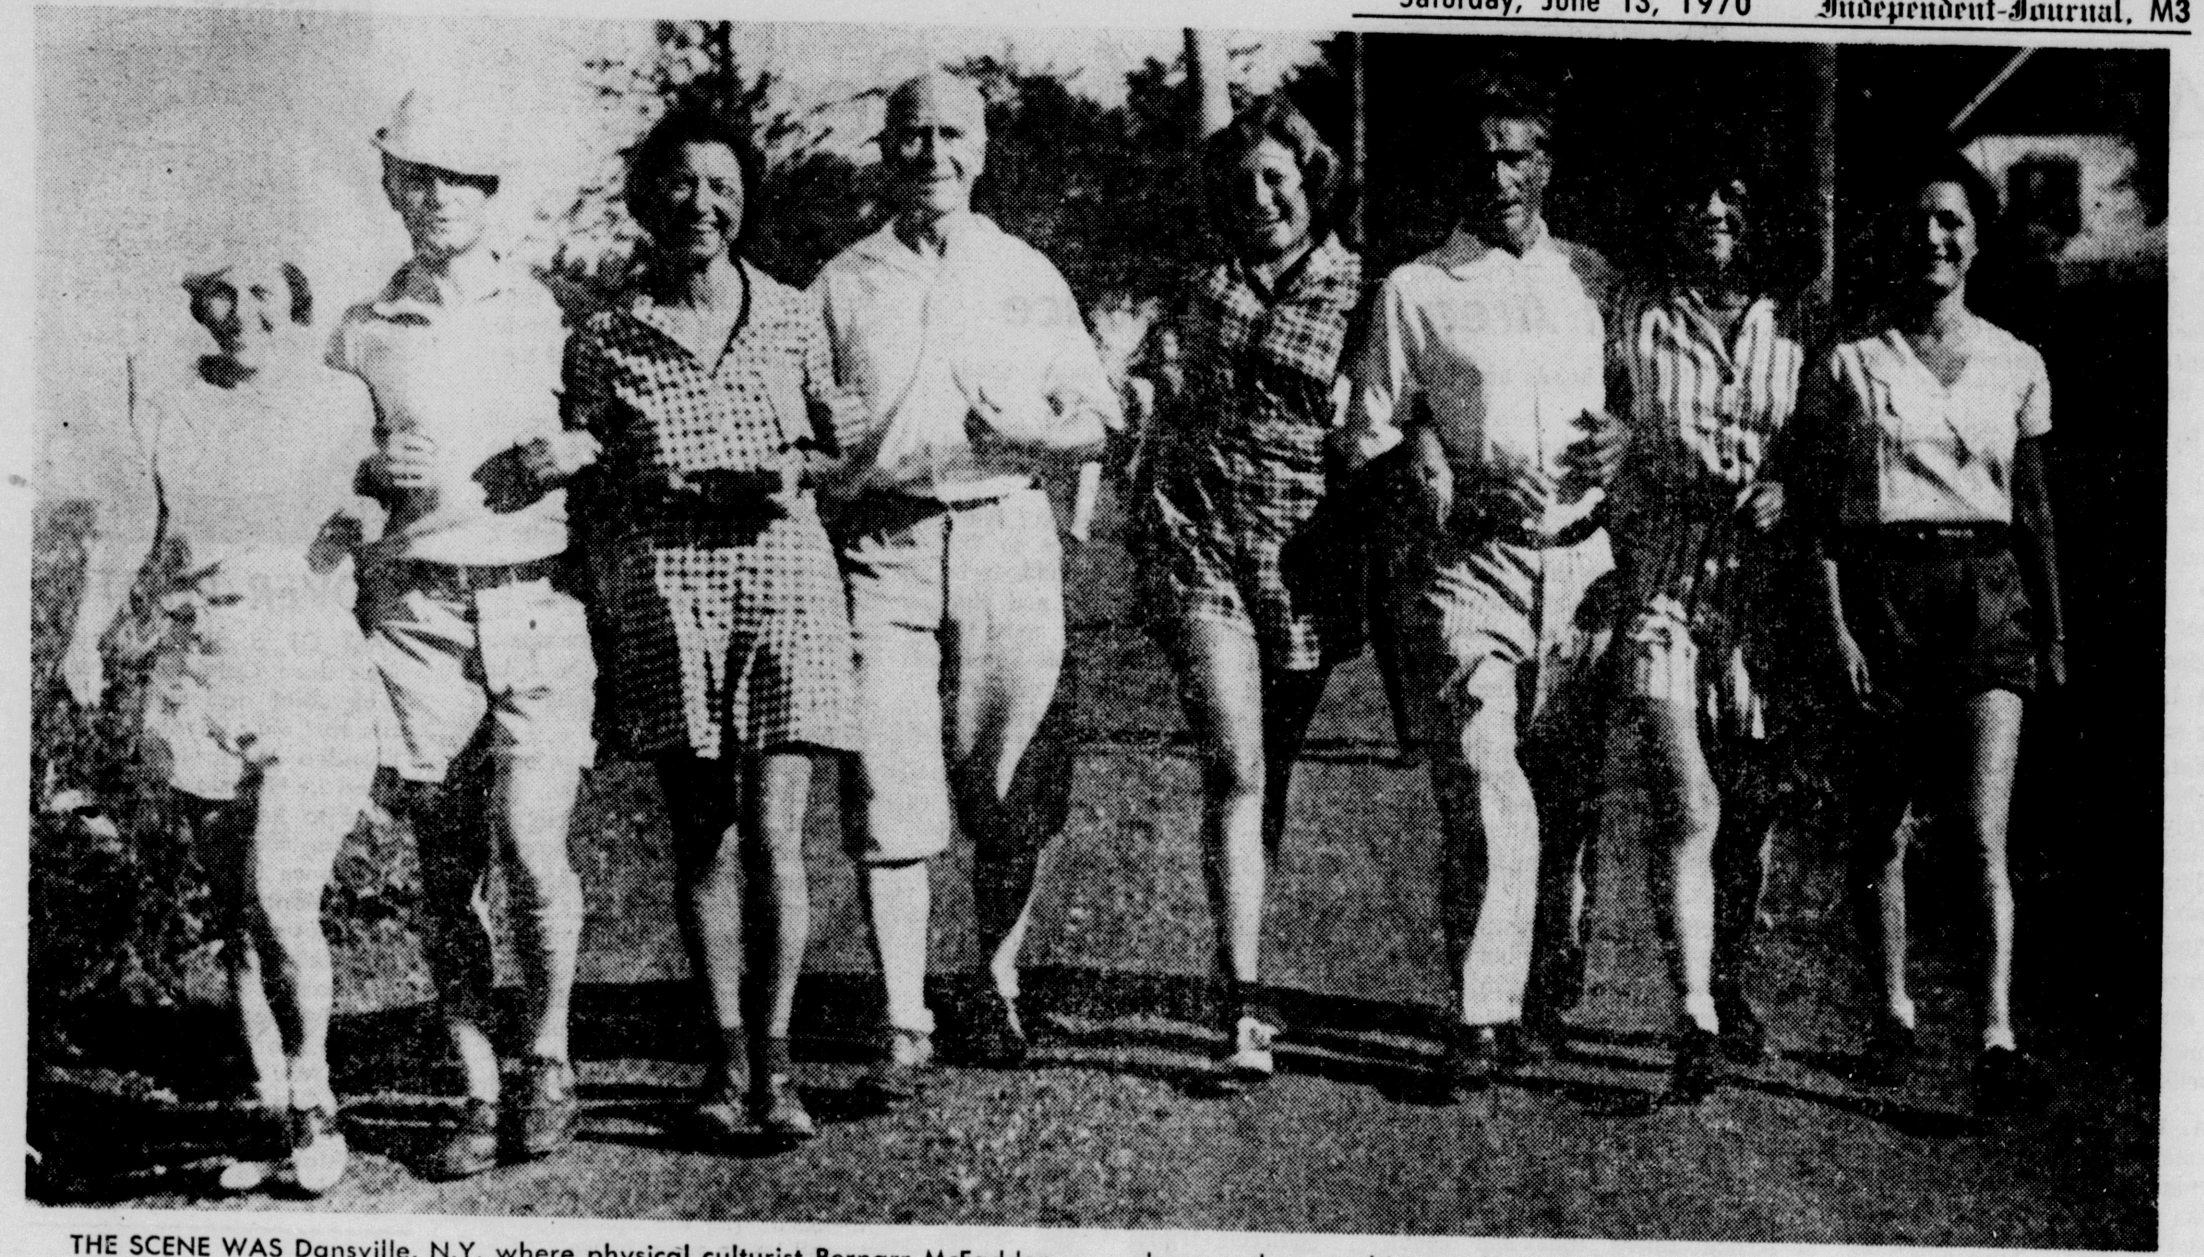
"Really good health is a state of genuine well-being, not simply the absence of disease. And good nutrition is a very important factor in achieving really good health."

As for husband Howard, once the scoffer:

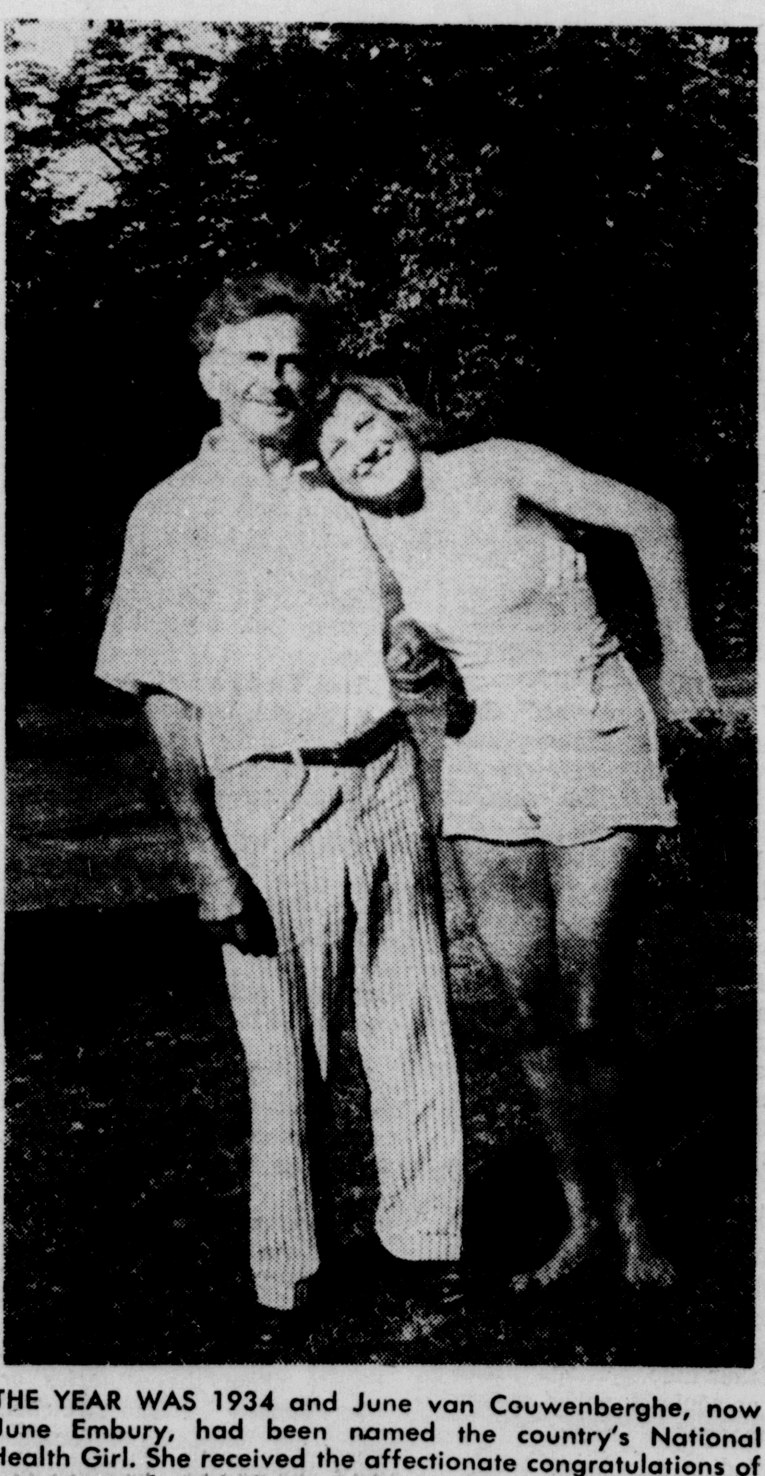
HE HAS LOST the 35 pounds of excess weight he carried four years ago.

And he has long since given up construction work to take over the full-time management of the store, "working harder than I ever did before, and enjoying it more."

He drinks a high protein cocktail four times a day to help him maintain that pace. And he has become, if such is possible, even more enthusiastic about health foods than is June Embury herself.



THE SCENE WAS Dansville, N.Y. where physical culturist Bernarr McFadden operated a health camp in the 1930s. That's June van Couwenberghe, the blonde in the center waving at the camera. Now June Embury of Marin, she was then teaching at the McFadden camp. McFadden himself is on her left, while on her right is Dr. Robert Jackson, another physical culture pioneer. Others are members of the camp staff.



THE YEAR WAS 1934 and June van Couwenberghe, now June Embury, had been named the country's National Health Girl. She received the affectionate congratulations of her mentor, famed physical culturist Bernarr McFadden.

A Proud And Peaceful People

Coast Miwoks Thrived In An Area Of Abundance

(Editor's Note: This is another in the series of articles on early Marin events and people completed by the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian, prior to her death.)

By FLORENCE DONNELLY

It is an irony of history that most Marinites know far more about the Sioux, the Comanche, the Apache, the Iroquois and other tribes that inhabited other regions than they know about the Indians that once lived in our own area.

Yet, Marin County has its Indian history, as indicated by such surviving anglicized place names as Olema (Olema-loke), Bolinas (Baulines) and Tomales (Tomalles).

And these Marin Indians were a more impressive people than is sometimes recognized, even though they were generally unwarlike.

A. L. KROEBER, one of the outstanding authorities on California Indians, divides the Miwoks into two categories, the Coast Miwoks and the Lake Miwoks. It was the Coast Miwoks who inhabited Marin. And these he broke down further into various tribes that for the most part were identified by the names of their villages or, as the Spanish called them, their rancherias.

From village to village the Miwok "tongue" differed, each having its own dialect.

Each village, too, had its own chief who presided at the tribal ceremonies, settled disputes, designated hunting grounds, etc.

ABOUT THE Miwoks has grown up the myth of a poor people of little culture. Archaeological finds along Marin's bays and streams, however, along with historical records have forced a modification of that thinking.

For instance, it was not so much an absence of initiative that caused the Coast Miwoks to avoid confrontations with other tribes. Blessed with abundant food, they had little reason to battle over disputed hunting grounds.

They had other assets, too, that Indians living inland lacked —shells and salt that were useful in barter. And dark volcanic obsidian rock that could be chipped into sharp edges for arrow and spear heads and knife blades.

THESE INDIANS had their own ingenious method for obtaining salt with minimum effort.

Winter storms drove the waters of San Pablo and San Francisco bays over the tidelands and far inland. As they receded, they left behind salt water pools. Into these ponds the Indians drove sticks. And when the summer sun dried the pools, the Indian women pulled up the sticks and knocked the salt clods clinging to them into their baskets.

There was not only ample salt for their own needs, but a surplus for trading with other salt-hungry tribes.

BASKET WEAVING was a useful art of these Indian women, and on hand were such materials as tules and milkweed.

The squaw pounded the tule or weed stems until she had strong fibers that she could twist into a cord. Frames for her baskets were fashioned from the pliable twigs of hazel bushes. The strands were soaked for softening, and then pulled in and out of the openings of the twig frame.

These baskets were woven so tightly they could hold water without leaking, and they were made in many shapes and sizes to serve various purposes. Bits of shell or tufts of quail or blackbird feathers were sometimes used for decoration.

STREAMS OF fresh water fed by springs high in the hills and miles of shoreline were still other Miwok assets. They could dig clams and take mussels and abalone.

Villages were often located along fresh water streams and stake fences or weirs were built to trap trout and other fish.

The men could hunt in hills and valleys where elk and deer were more than plentiful.

The crafty Indians, knowing the limited range of their bows and arrows, would don deer or elks heads and skins so they could creep up on their prey.

EVERY PART of the slain deer was used. The hide served many purposes, as covering for wickiups, as thongs, as clothing, etc. Antlers were carved into tools. And when the tribe had eaten its full of fresh meat, the remaining flesh was dried in the sun and turned into the "jerkey" from which hunters and runners could get their nourishment while on the move.

Rabbit drives were an easy means of obtaining meat.

The Indian men would form a large circle, then slowly come together. Trapped rabbits inside the circle were clubbed to death.

TO THE WOMEN fell such tasks as the harvesting of wild oats and seeds, and the toasting of the grain in wide flat baskets over hot coals.

This toasted grain would then be pounded with pestles in stone mortars for long hours. Seeds, too, were stone ground.

The oak tree, too, provided food for the Indians.

The men climbed its trunk and shook its branches so that acorns fell to the ground, to be picked up by women and children. The hard shells were removed, and the soft meats ground into a meal that was leached with boiling water to remove its bitter taste. The acorn dough was then cooked on hot rocks, and sometimes berries, salmon and honey were added to make this unleavened bread more tasty.

ACORNS WERE also cooked in salted water to form a soft, edible mush.

Large supplies of acorns were laid away for the winter in granaries made of willow branches or tules, set on poles and covered with bark or hides. Pitch was spread on the poles at ground level so that mice or squirrels trying to get at the acorns were caught in the pitch.

An Indian woman wanting acorns during the winter simply pulled apart the woven branches or tules at the bottom of the granary. When enough acorns had poured through the opening, she closed the hole with more twigs.

MARIN ALSO had many hazelnut bushes, and these provided another source of delicious food.

The Indians were skilled too at cooking the roots of many native plants. Manzanita berries were eaten. Still other plants were used for their medicinal value.

Fish, caught in the streams, were cleaned and dried, to be used later to provide a change of diet.

Although the Indians lacked the tools necessary to fell the redwoods and other big trees, they were able to supply their needs by picking up fallen trunks and branches in the woods and dragging them to their village.

BEES SUPPLIED honey that sometimes was added to the bread or gruel.

And while the Miwoks were not a seafaring people, they built rafts or balsas by binding tules together. The balsas would be poled into the quieter waters of the bays where the Indians would spear salmon and sea otters, using harpoons made of bone or antlers.

The village arrangement gave the Miwok both companionship and protection. Each family, however, had its own wickiup.

TO BUILD IT, a circle about 10 feet in diameter was marked on the ground. Then, in the circle, a pit two feet deep was dug. Saplings, usually willows, were brought in by the Indian man and trimmed to make poles 10 feet long. These poles were stuck in the ground around the pit and the tops tied together with thongs. Branches of trees were woven in and out of the poles.

To make the wickiup more weather-resistant, mats of tules were fastened to the outside. Rain slid off the mats as if they were shingles.

Dirt from the pit was pounded around the shelter. Two holes were left open, one as a ground level entrance, the other at the top so that smoke could exit. A mat was hung over the entrance to keep out wind and rain.

IN MOST villages there was a larger wickiup where the tribe could gather to talk, sing and dance.

The Miwoks might have been primitives — people who still started their fires by friction. But they also knew and practiced the good life — ample food and water, warm fires, adequate shelter, personal cleanliness, etc.

They had learned, too, the value of relaxation and companionship. Long before white Americans imported the sauna bath from Scandinavia, the Miwoks had their own version of it.

EACH VILLAGE has its temenscale (as the Spanish were to call it) or sweat-house.

In his "Seventy-Five Years in California," William Heath Dav- is told of viewing their sweat-house rituals as it had been going on generations before him:

"I have often seen the Indians north of the Bay of San Francisco at their temenscales. A large cavity was made in the ground six or eight feet deep, somewhat like a cellar and tightly covered over with brush, with a little aperture for the smoke to pass out. In the cavity they made a very hot fire, and a number of them, men, women and children, nearly bare of clothing, went in and subjected themselves to the heating process . . .

"THEY REMAINED there for a half-hour to an hour, or entirely heated through, so that the perspiration ran off them in streams. In that condition, they rushed out, plunged into a pool in a creek nearby, cooled off and washed, after which they returned to their habitations.

"I frequently watched this steaming of the Indians and wondered that they were not instantly killed by the sudden transition from hot to cold, but never knew one of them to be injured."

The Indian women and girls wore skirts made of tules or a strip of soft bark. Sometimes an especially fine skirt was made of deerskin, after the hair had been scraped away and the hide softened by continuous rubbing. The skirt was open at the sides so that it was easy for the wearer to climb hills or to squat upon the ground.

IN WARM weather the skirt was all the Indian woman wore. But if it were cold, she would also don a cape of deerskin or of some other hide, perhaps that of rabbit or squirrel, pulled together by thongs.

The Indian men were nearly-nude, except for a deerskin around their waists tied with a strip of leather. In rain or cold they added capes like those of their women. Generally their feet were bare, but when they were hunting or beginning a long journey, they would put on moccasins, sandals made of soft leather.

LAST OF a proud people was Jose Caleistro, a Miwok chief and said to be the last surviving full-blooded Marin Indian. He lived in Nicasio and struggled to keep together the remnants of his tribe who had once lived in peace and plenty in Marin, but who found themselves unable to adjust to what had become a white man's world. The portrait hangs in the Marin Historical Society Museum at Boyd Park, San Rafael, where it was copied by Independent-Journal photographer Bob Hax.

Although bears roamed the Marin hills then, the Indians did not hunt them. There were easier sources of furs, hides and meat that could be taken without risk to lives.

THE INDIAN babies were carried in baskets strapped to their mother's back. They and older children wore no clothing in warm weather. And in winter they stayed inside the wickiup. There were cradles of deerskin on a basket frame.

These people were sturdy, of medium height. The men were muscular and lithe. The women, slender in youth, gained weight in later years when the younger women took over the heavier work.

The Indians were dark-skinned, bushy-browed, with deep-set dark eyes and black hair. The cheek bones were high and prominent.

THEY WERE for the most part friendly people, although there was at least one village along Tomales Bay whose occupants were more aggressive, resisting bitterly other Indians who came to dig the clams.

Kroeber has written of the people of this place and time:

"Marin and its environs are extraordinarily diversified in coast line, nature of shore, topography, exposure, temperature and vegetation, and much of the district must have been extraordinarily well suited for native occupation.

"SETTLEMENTS clustered mostly about the estuaries or their vicinity . . One stretched along the sunny side of Tomales Bay. Bolinas Bay probably had at least one village. Sausalito and the shores of Richardson Bay were inviting. Beyond, San Rafael and the adjacent shore were attractive.

"In the region of Ignacio and Novato, hills and bay sloughs are still in proximity and there are records of several settlements as well as an abundance of shell deposits.

"On San Antonio Creek were Olompali and its outposts . . .It was evidently more convenient to live in the open, close to the supply of mussels, clams, fish and waterfowl, and occasionally visit the hills to hunt, than to live in the shade inland and travel to the shore. Mollusks were, perhaps, a more dependable, if less prized, diet than venison."

THIS THEN was the quite peaceful and relatively comfortable way of life that the first white men visiting Marin's shores discovered.

Kroeber has quoted from "the principal narrative that has survived (Sir Francis) Drake's 1579 landing in Marin while on his circumnavigation of the globe voyage" which he describes as "surprisingly detailed in its account of the inhabitants of Nova Albion . . ."

The Drake party, says Kroeber, found the substantial wickiups described earlier, the well-made baskets, the shells

WHITE MEN among the early arrivals in Marin found the Coast Miwoks looking very much like these artist's sketches of California Indians of 1764. At top, the men were nearly nude, except for a deerskin worn around their waists and tied with a strip of leather. And at right, the women, who wore only tule, bark or deerskin skirts in warm weather, added capes of deer or other animal hides for cooler temperatures.

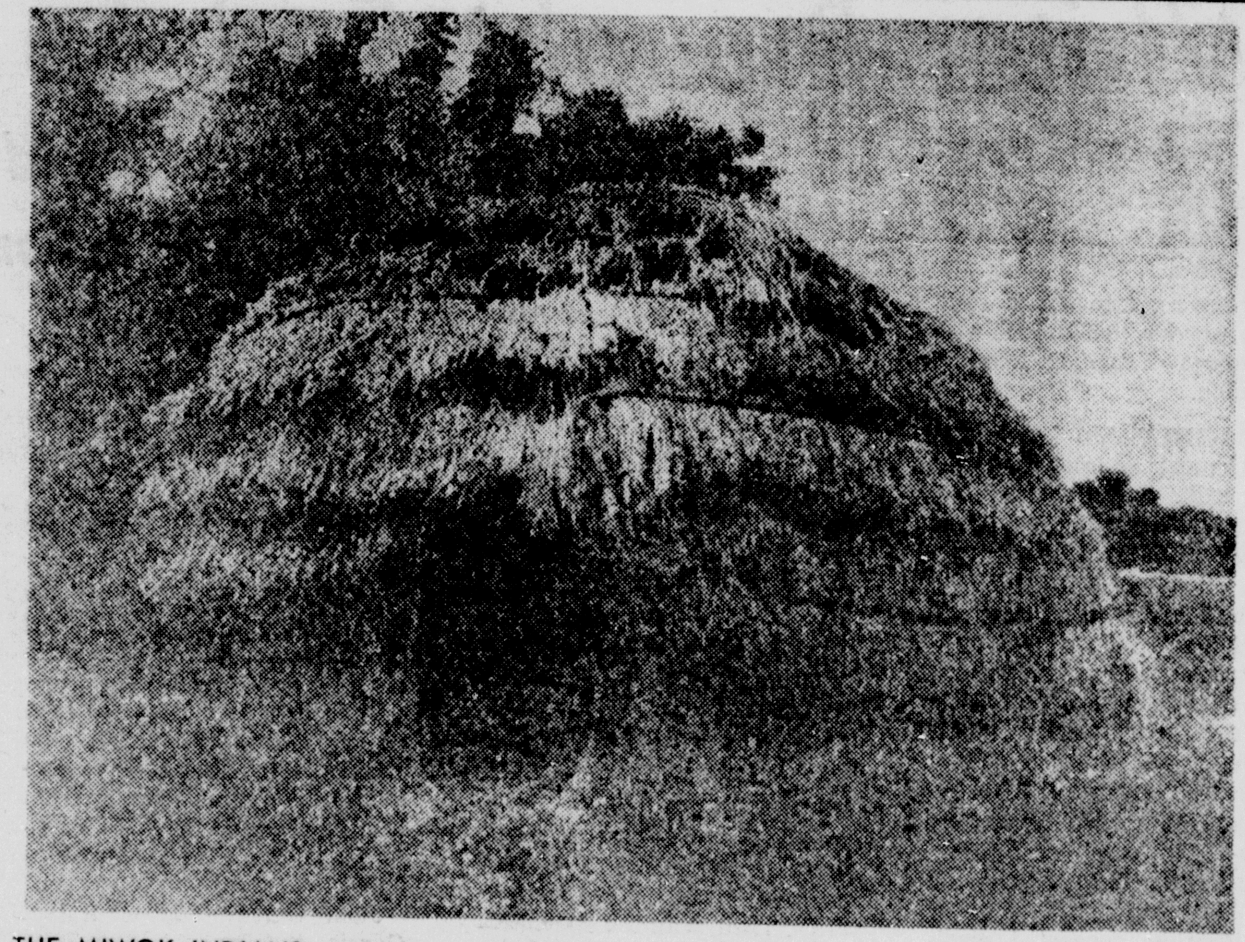
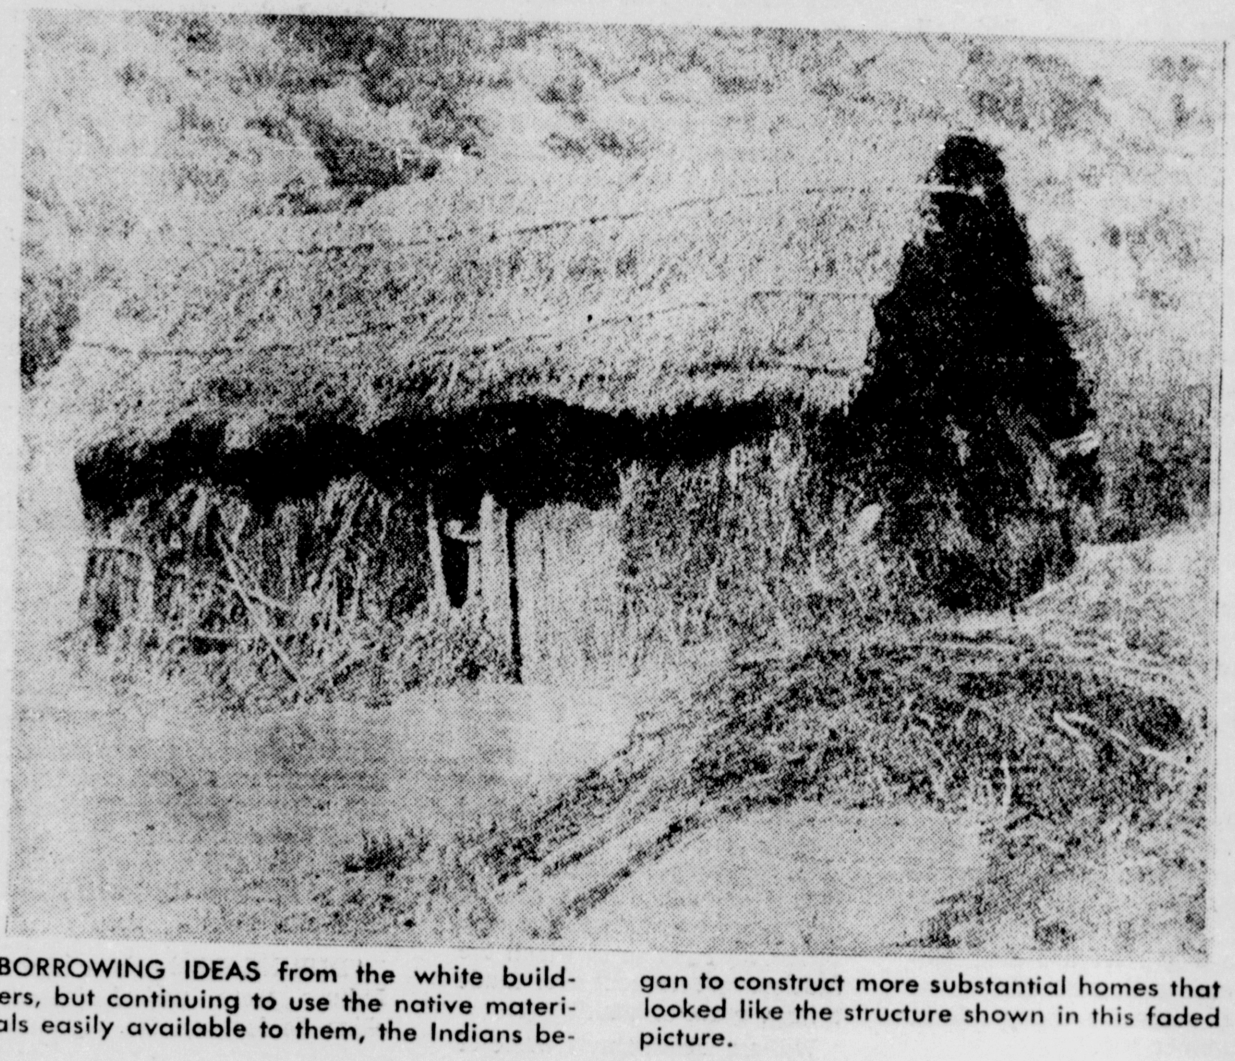
The Indians Of Marin—

Miwoks Led A Good Life Before White Man Came



THE MIWOK INDIANS were living in these "bee-hive" shape huts when the first white men reached Marin County. Constructed of poles and tules or bulrushes, the dwellings were built around a firepit with a hole at the top to allow the smoke to escape.



BORROWING IDEAS from the white builders, but continuing to use the native materials easily available to them, the Indians began to construct more substantial homes that looked like the structure shown in this faded picture.

that were used as money and as ornaments (mistaken for bone by the English).

FROM THESE visitors Kroeber borrowed this description of the Indian bows and arrows:

"Their bows and arrows which are their only weapons and almost all the wealth, they use skillfully, yet without much execution, they being fitter for children than for men (so the small bows would have seemed when compared with the powerful weapons of the English archers).

"Yet they (the Indians) are usually so strong that one of them could easily carry that a mile together without pain which two or three Englishmen could hardly bear. They run very swiftly and long, and seldom go any other pace; if they see a fish so near shore as to reach the place without swimming, they seldom miss it.

"DIVING FOR fish in the ocean has not been reported for any Californians, but several tribes are said to have taken salmon by hand in pools of considerable depth."

In analyzing the Drake report, Kroeber says: "Only the canoe in which one man put out to meet the ship and in which others subsequently appear to have paddled, when the English boat 'could row no way out but they would follow them,' presents a discrepancy. There is no authentic record of true canoes on the whole coast from Cape Mendocino to the vicinity of San Luis Obispo.

"Either custom has changed since Drake's day, or his 'canoe' was a loose term for the tule balsa which is often boatshaped, with raised sides, especially when intended for navigation.

"THERE IS NO doubt that, like Cabrillo . . .Drake was received with marked kindness. The simplest explanation is that the Indians regarded the whites as returned dead. Such a belief would account for their repeated wailing and self-laceration, as well as the burned sacrifice of feathers."

"Evidence on the final test — speech — is too scant to be conclusive, but it is at least favorable to the opinion that Drake's friends must have been Coast Miwoks. The herb, 'tobah,' which was presented in little baskets, is, of course, tobacco. And the root called 'patah' from which they made bread or ate it either baked or raw, refers to the Broadieaea and other lily bulbs consumed in quantities by all Californians. The word, however, stands for potato."

THE NEXT significant report of the Marin Indians came as the result of the 1595 visit to California's shores by the Portuguese, Sebastian Rodriguez Cermeno.

Cermeno had been given permission by Luis de Velasco, viceroy of New Spain (Mexico), to pilot a ship to the Philippines on a voyage of discovery, particularly to pinpoint ports where ships on future voyages might land to rest their crews and replenish food supplies. Cermeno was also authorized to carry freight in order to earn money from the venture.

He sailed from Acapulco on the San Pedro and reached the Philippines safely. There, he transferred to the San Agustin, and with a crew of 70 men and 130 tons of cargo on board, left Cavite July 5, 1595, on the return trip.

OFF THE California coast, the San Agustin was hard hit by a storm that ripped off part of her deck.

Despite the objections of his crew, Cermeno brought the ship into Drake's Bay on Nov. 6, 1595.

Robert Fleming Heizer, writing for the California Historical Society Quarterly of December, 1941, quoted from Cermeno's log:

"Many Indians appeared on the beach and one of them came out to the ship in a tule balsa which he propelled with a paddle at each end. He remained beside the ship for some time talking in his language. Some cotton cloth, silk and a red cap were given to him.

"EARLY THE next morning four men, each rowing a tule balsa, came out to the ship and remained along side talking. They were given gifts of cloth after which they went ashore."

Cermeno then went ashore with 22 of his men in a ship's boat, landing on the beach near some Indian habitations.

He reported: "The people were well built, robust and inclined to fatness. The men were entirely naked, but the women wore grass or skin skirts. The hair was worn long, and body painting on the breast and arms was observed."

Cermeno took formal possession of the land in the name of the King of Spain. Then he and his men, in military formation, marched to the Indian village "about a harquebus-shot" from the shore.

THE INDIANS, about 50 in number and all adults, proved peaceful and gave their visitors some small seeds. Such seeds, crabs, wild birds and elk were found to be the dietary staples of the Indians.

The Cermeno party then proceeded inland for less than two miles where they met a band of Indian men, who upon seeing the newcomers, formed a circle and "uttered loud howls." A leader, carrying a tall banner of black feathers, approached the exploring party. Friendly Indians from the coastal village who had accompanied the white men talked to the new arrivals — "whereupon the latter laid down their bows and approached in a humble manner as if terrorized."

The native leader presented Cermeno with the black feather banner while other Indians handed over their bows to the Spaniards.

THE REPORT speaks of black and red paint on the faces of the Indians.

And Caroline O'Hara in her manuscript, "Indians of Marin County," giving as her sources Hubert Howe Bancroft's "Native Races of the Pacific Coast" and Bulletin 30. Bureau of American Ethnology, Washington, D. C., tells how the Indians, "small and so dark as to be almost black," were fond of painting their faces "in triangles and lines of vermillion."

The dyes, she said, were obtained by bartering with friendly tribes that lived near the New Almaden cinnabar mine.

CERMENO PUT into use a launch from the San Agustin that had been obtained in the Philippines, and several expeditions were made inland to obtain acorns and hazelnuts. They visited several additional Indian villages.

Disaster struck the Europeans when a heavy gale drove the San Agustin aground, wrecking the ship. Several men were lost. And there was the first trouble with the Indian villagers when some of the natives attempted to carry off wood from the damaged ship.

Dr. Heizer and others from the University of California discovered porcelain fragments while excavating on the Point Reyes Peninsula in 1940 that were believed to have been part of the San Agustin's cargo. Another expedition in 1941 discovered additional fragments.

CERMENO AND his crew suffered hunger and danger before, on Dec. 8, they pushed off from the Marin shore in the small Philippine launch. Seven weeks later, they reached port in Mexico.

Early white visitors were interested in the leisurely life enjoyed by the Coast Miwoks.

There were great feasts with the people enjoying dancing, singing and instrumental music. That music was discordant to the ears of the visitors, but it had a definite rhythm.

THERE WERE whistles made from hollow bones and flutes from hollow reeds. And rattles of dry, round sticks, split down the middle.

And dancing and music seemed a part of every occasion — at weddings, at funerals, to celebrate good hunting and fishing, to mark a plentiful acorn harvest, etc.

Once Proud Indians Could Not Cope With The New Civilization In Marin

There were contests of skill, too, to provide the Indians with amusement — running, hunting, swimming.

THE CHILDREN learned to swim almost as soon as they could walk. And they climbed trees to swing high in the air from branches.

The men played stick games in which they dropped handsful of sticks on a hide spread upon the ground and around which they squatted. And there is some evidence that the Indians gambled with shells as they played these games.

Each village had its shaman or medicine man, responsible for keeping away the evil spirits with his songs and dances. Sometimes he concocted medicinal brews, for the Indians knew the special properties of many of the herbs of the area.

WHEN A villager died, all Indians mourned, with the men silent, the women wailing. The body might be cremated or buried. If buried, the dead person's most treasured possessions — polished abalone shells, arrow heads, etc. — went into the earth with him.

Written records dealing with Marin Indians from 1595 to 1776 are lacking.

Honoria Twomey in her "History of Sonoma County" gives the date July, 1776, for the time when two young Spaniards sent by Juan de Ayala, commander of the San Carlos, visited an Indian village in Marin.

SUBSEQUENTLY, De Ayala sent out other expeditions, and his shipmaster, Capt. Fernando Quiros, sailed the ship's boat up the Petaluma River.

Two other Spaniards were sent from Lime Point into Marin and historians recorded their observances as they rode along the bay shore until they came to "a gurgling brook splashing along the well-wooded hillsides where they refreshed their jaded steeds and were themselves regaled after the weary ride in the summer sun."

They noted that their surroundings showed evidence of long use as a camp by an Indian tribe. And when they encountered those Indians, they were received with hospitality that they returned by teaching the natives the skills of adobe brick making and house building.

THESE WERE the Olumpalis, later changed to the Olompalis. And under the supervision of the visiting Spaniards, the Indians built for their chief an adobe house, really a simple structure of but one room, 16 by 24 feet. But it must have seemed a marvel to the Indians, accustomed only to their crude wickiups.

How long the Spaniards remained at Olompali is not known, but it was probably a visit of short duration.

However, a second adobe dwelling, this one a larger structure, 24 by 56 feet, was also built at right angles to the first. And it became the home of the tribe's chief.

WITH ONLY periodic visits from white men, the Indians of Marin continued to live very much as they had lived for centuries. Then, with the dedication of the Mission San Rafael Arcangel in 1817 as part of the Franciscan mission chain in California, a great change was wrought in the lives of the natives.

Some resisted the attempts to Christianize them, regarding the missionaries as invaders and remaining aloof from the mission activities. But others listened to the new teachers, gaining not only a new religion but also the rudiments of an education.

One such was Camilo Ynitia, who succeeded his father as chief of the Olompalis and who was respected and praised by white men as well as his fellow Indians.

YNITIA WAS granted two square leagues, the Olompali Rancho, on Oct. 22, 1843, by Manuel Micheltorena, the Mexican governor after Mexico had gained its independence and assumed the administration of California.

The late Steve Richardson, son of Marin pioneer Capt. William Richardson, described Camilo Ynitia as "a man of marked ability, clean-cut, capable, all-around. To the best of my knowledge, he was the only full-blooded Indian to whom the Mexican government ever made a large grant of land."

William Heath Davis wrote of the Olompali chief:

"I KNEW (HIM) as a fine, intelligent man. He often came to San Francisco to purchase goods from Nathan Spear, whose agent I was then. He owned 600 cattle, numerous horses and sheep, and was a quite noted breeder. He was punctual in meeting his obligations, and because of this and his affability and intelligence, he was highly esteemed by all of us.

"He could read and write and keep accounts, having been educated by the missionaries at Mission San Rafael Arcangel. He was, likewise, a wheat-raiser and sold his crops to the Russians (who had established a settlement at Fort Ross).

"At the death of Solano (who had been General Vallejo's contact with the tribes), Camilo directed the burial with all tribal honors. General Vallejo always treated Camilo and Solano with high consideration because it was through these men he controlled and conquered tribes of Indians without shedding blood. It was also with their assistance that he had command of all the laborers he needed for his vast improvements in Sonoma and Petaluma."

RECORDS AT Mission San Rafael Arcangel up to 1822 show 829 Indians baptized, 244 married, 183 dead and 830 surviving.

The death rate is not so high as might first appear, since the mission was established to provide care for neophytes from Mission Dolores who were already ailing and sometimes dying.

Juan Garcia, son of Rafael Garcia, grantee of a large Marin rancho, told how his father, then a corporal, was sent by Luis Antonio Arguello, commandant of the Presidio at San Francisco, to Marin on a good-will mission.

"HE WAS SENT to San Rafael on a sort of raft that drifted up the bay with the tide and was able to effect a landing at what is known as McNear's Point today. When he went ashore he was greeted by friendly Indians, who to the number of about 500 were camped where the B. B. McNear home (Glenwood) is today."

Garcia said several tribes of Indians were then headquartered in Marin, with some of them living in the willows at the foot of San Rafael's B street.

"The tidewater in the days of the mission and for many years thereafter came up to E Street, and all the land east of B Street was a beautiful clam bed at low tide, where the Indians secured their supply of clams and mussels. The east end of the town, from B Street to the bay, was covered at high tide, and at the foot of B Street the Indians had their rancheria.

"DURING THE winter these Indians were garbed in elk skins. In fact, all the wigwams and all the interior furnishing of same were made from skins of elk . . .

"I remember as a boy when the missionaries would use the water from San Rafael Hill to irrigate the orchard. This water was run down through a ditch. It was a novel irrigation scheme, and worked beautifully. The missionaries were very skillful at different trades and never shirked work themselves.

"Sundays and holy days of obligation were great days at the mission. The Indians and their families would come from miles around and attend mass in the mission church. They would bring venison, clams and hides to the missionaries, and in return would take away provisions obtainable at the mission storehouse.

"THE NICASIO Tribe, who were once powerful and numbered by the thousands, were inclined to be war-like, and whenever they arrived in San Rafael the missionaries had all they could do to prevent quarreling . . .

"For weeks before Easter Sunday, the missionaries were occupied in instructing the Indian children for the sacrament of confirmation . . . Two days before Easter, the Indians began arriving in San Rafael until, on the great day, several thousand were camped here and in the valley, the squaws dressed in every color of the rainbow, and the man in pants of elk skins and wearing warpaint.

"In the lower end of town, every tree and shrub was used as a hitching post for the Indian ponies. The carcasses of two score elk were roasted and served to the Indians . . . "

GARCIA TOLD, too, how Fr. Juan Amoroso secured a number of musical string instruments from Spain and formed a seven-member orchestra of young Indians.

The older Garcia told his son, too, of the scenes in the evenings among the wigwam clusters.

"Here and there among the wigwams one would encounter the mothers with suckling babes at their breasts, while they worked with pestles crushing grain in the mortars. Here and there one would discern a squaw loaded down with a burden of wood. Or a young buck returning with elk, deer, rabbits and other prey from the forest. Or fishermen coming back with the produce of the rivers, bay and ocean.

"THE YOUNG squaws, the belles of the day, painted with all the colors of the rainbow and decked in gorgeous calicos and burdened with shell and bead ornaments, occupied places of advantage beneath the spreading oaks for which the valley was famous in early days.

"Bucks, young and old, squatted here and there, smoking their long pipes and awaiting the evening dinner call."

But such happy scenes ended with the Mexican government's decree secularizing the missions. The friars left Mission San Rafael Arcangel. And the Indians dispersed.

DON TIMOTEO Murphy, as agent for the Marin Indians, succeeded in obtaining for them the grant of 20 square leagues in the Nicasio Valley. But after his death, the claim was voided by the land commission.

The Indians had also been promised a third of the horses at the mission plus other livestock. But there is no record that this promise was kept.

The Indians who had lived at the Mission San Rafael Arcangel had learned to speak Spanish, the language of the Franciscans, and such useful trades as boat-building, blacksmithing, metal work and carpentry, as well as farming and stockraising. But few could find work in such fields.

INSTEAD, THE owners of the large ranchos now found themselves with a vast source of labor, for which they had to pay only a pittance.

Some of these ranchers treat-

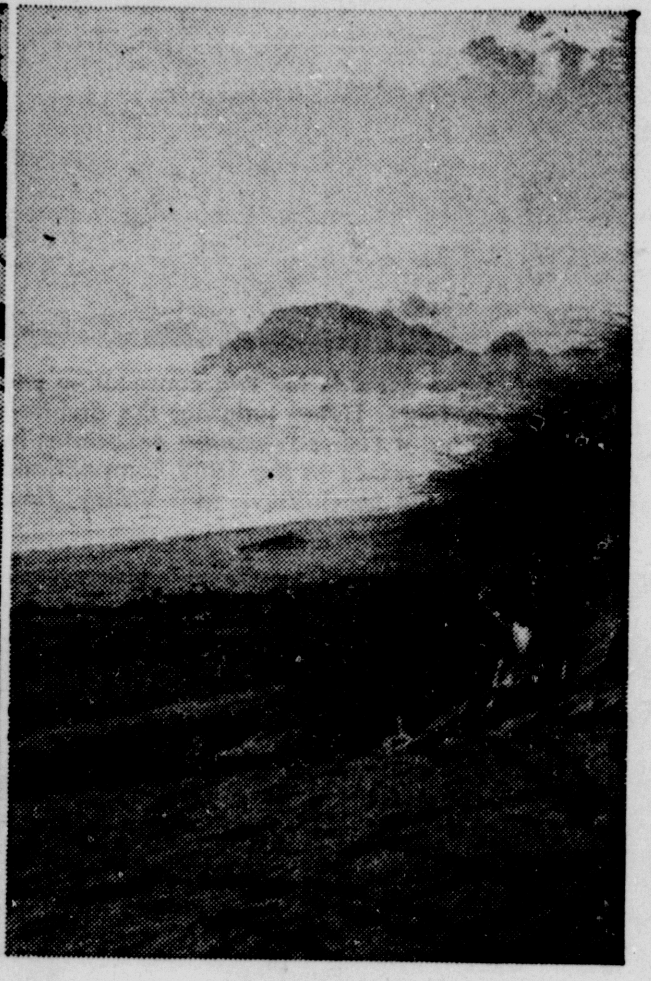
The beach.



Where would you like your country homesite? . . . At beachside, near the sound of the surf? . . . On a grassy meadow, with wildflowers beating a path to your door? . . . Or sheltered on a gentle slope in a forest of redwoods and pines?

The Sea Ranch gives you a choice of all three, all within one development only 2½ hours from San Francisco.

Just because you choose one type of site here, though, does not mean that you have to forego the pleasures of the others. Nearly half The Sea Ranch land—including beaches, headlands and much of the meadow—is reserved for the recreational use of all who live here. You have free access to these areas. Thus, you can saddle up for a ride in the woods, picnic on the beach, hike the meadows, anytime the spirit moves you.

Prices for homesites at The Sea Ranch begin at $7,500. To find out more about this spectacular country home colony on the Sonoma Coast, send for our free brochure and more information. Simply call (415) 391-4002 in San Francisco or mail the coupon below.

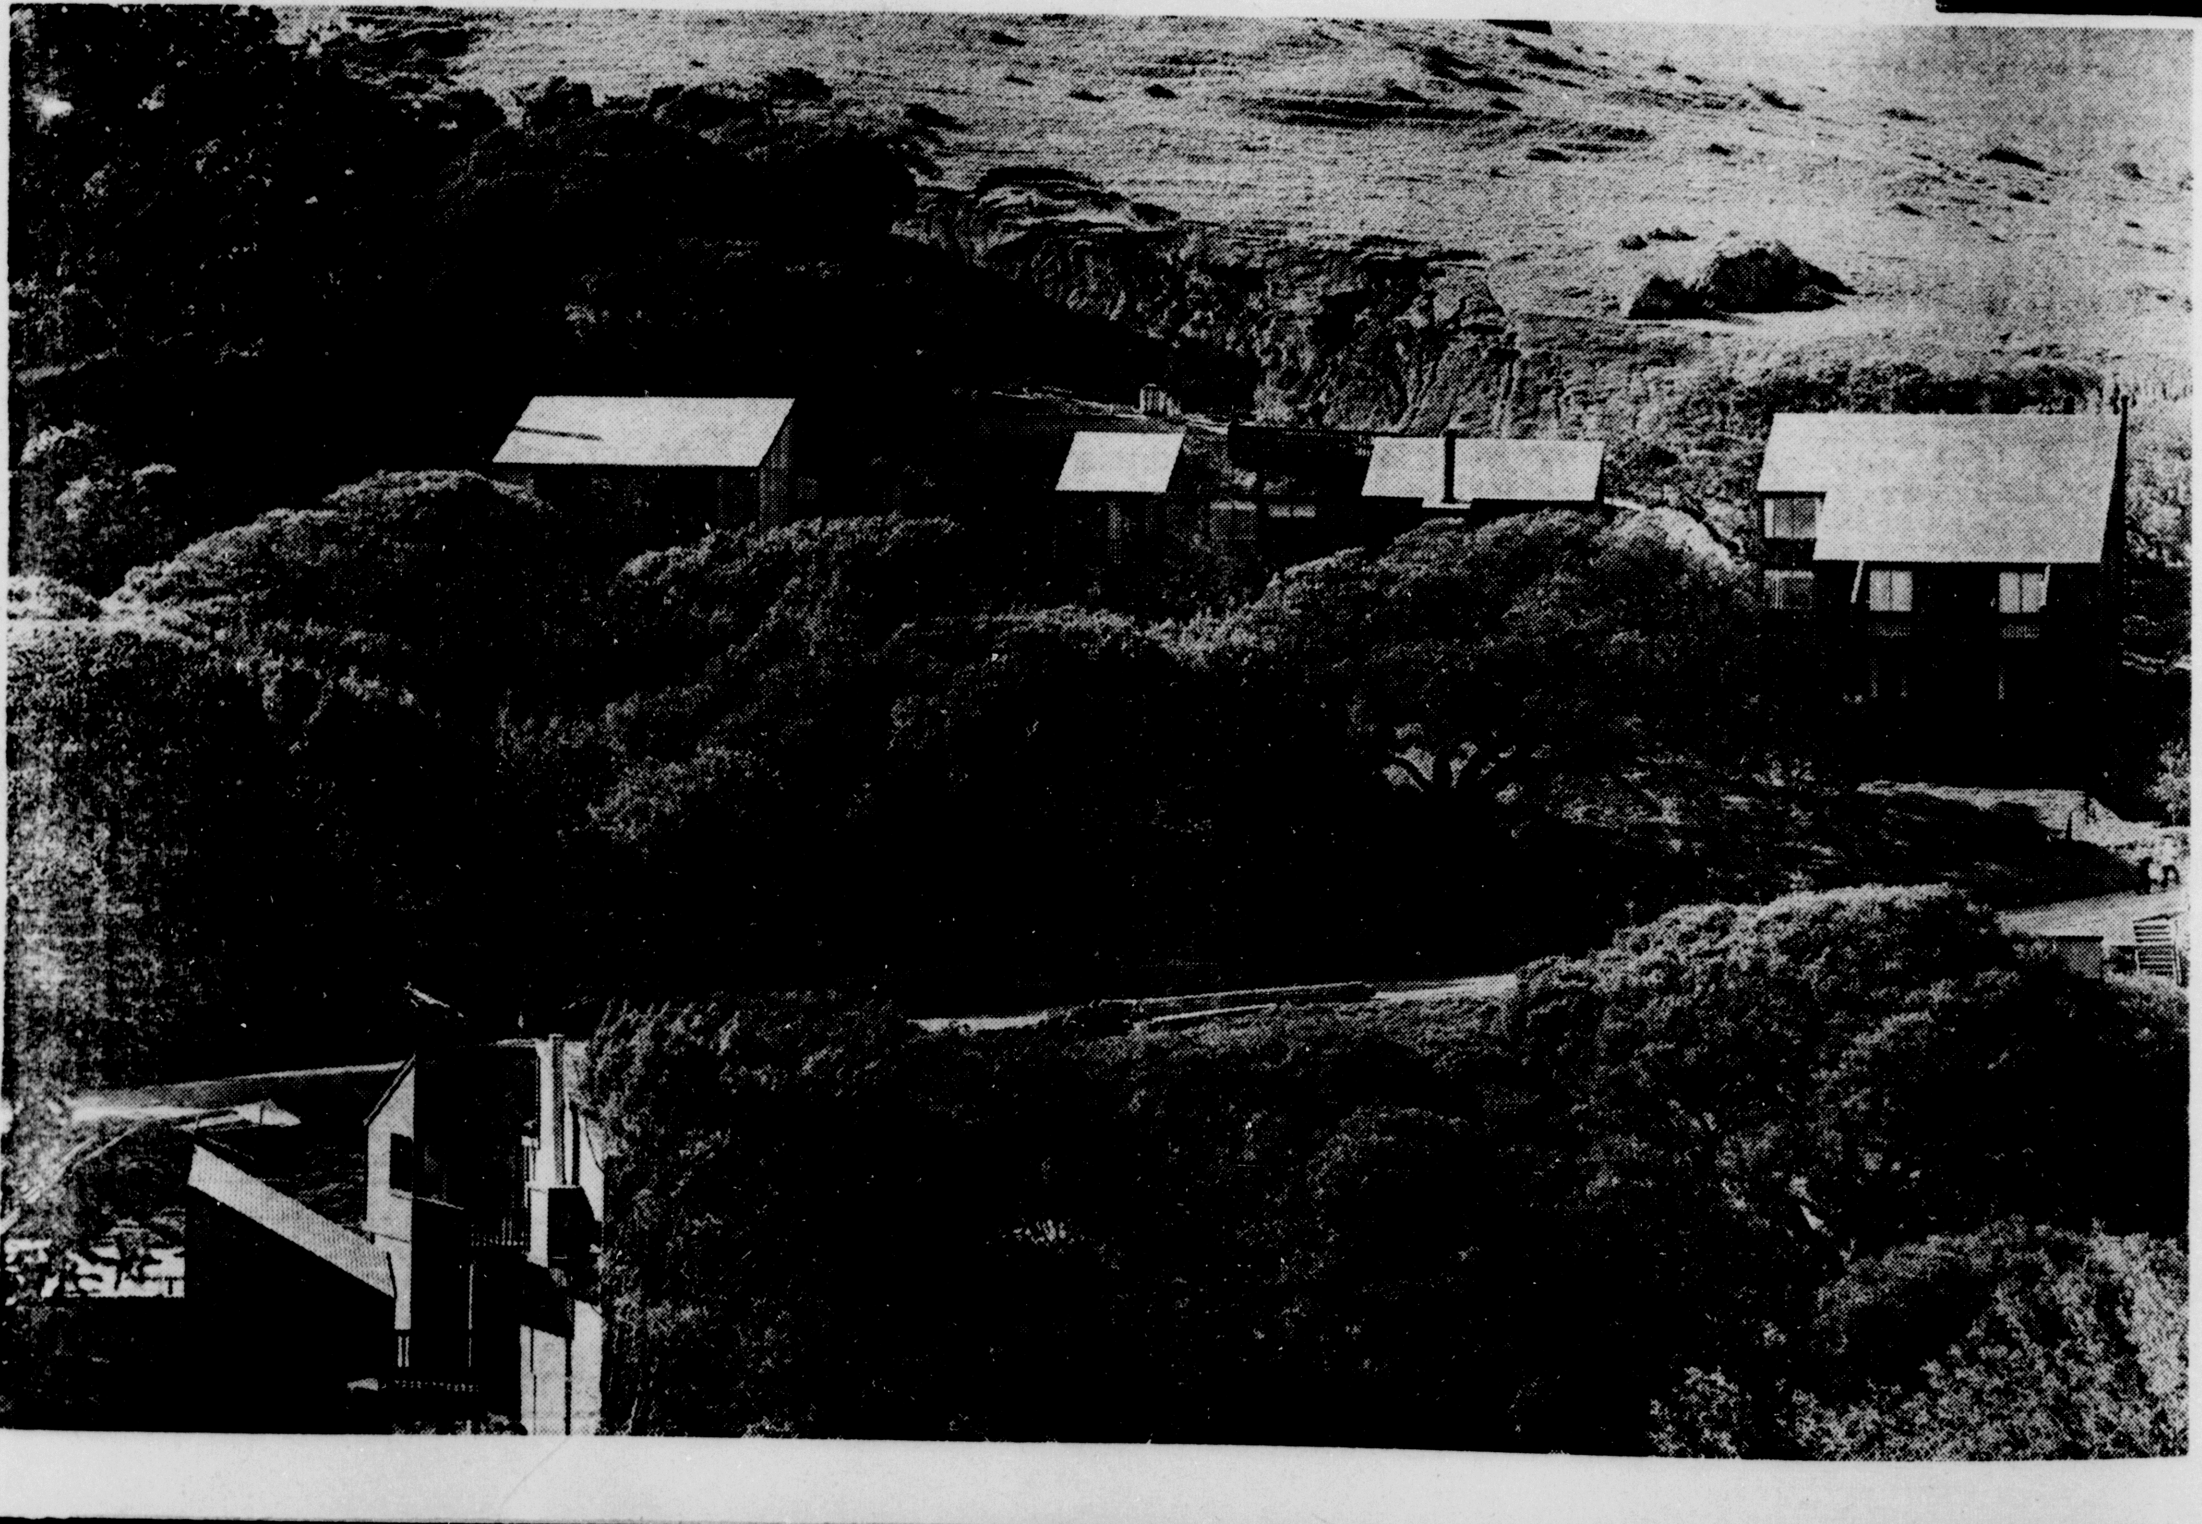
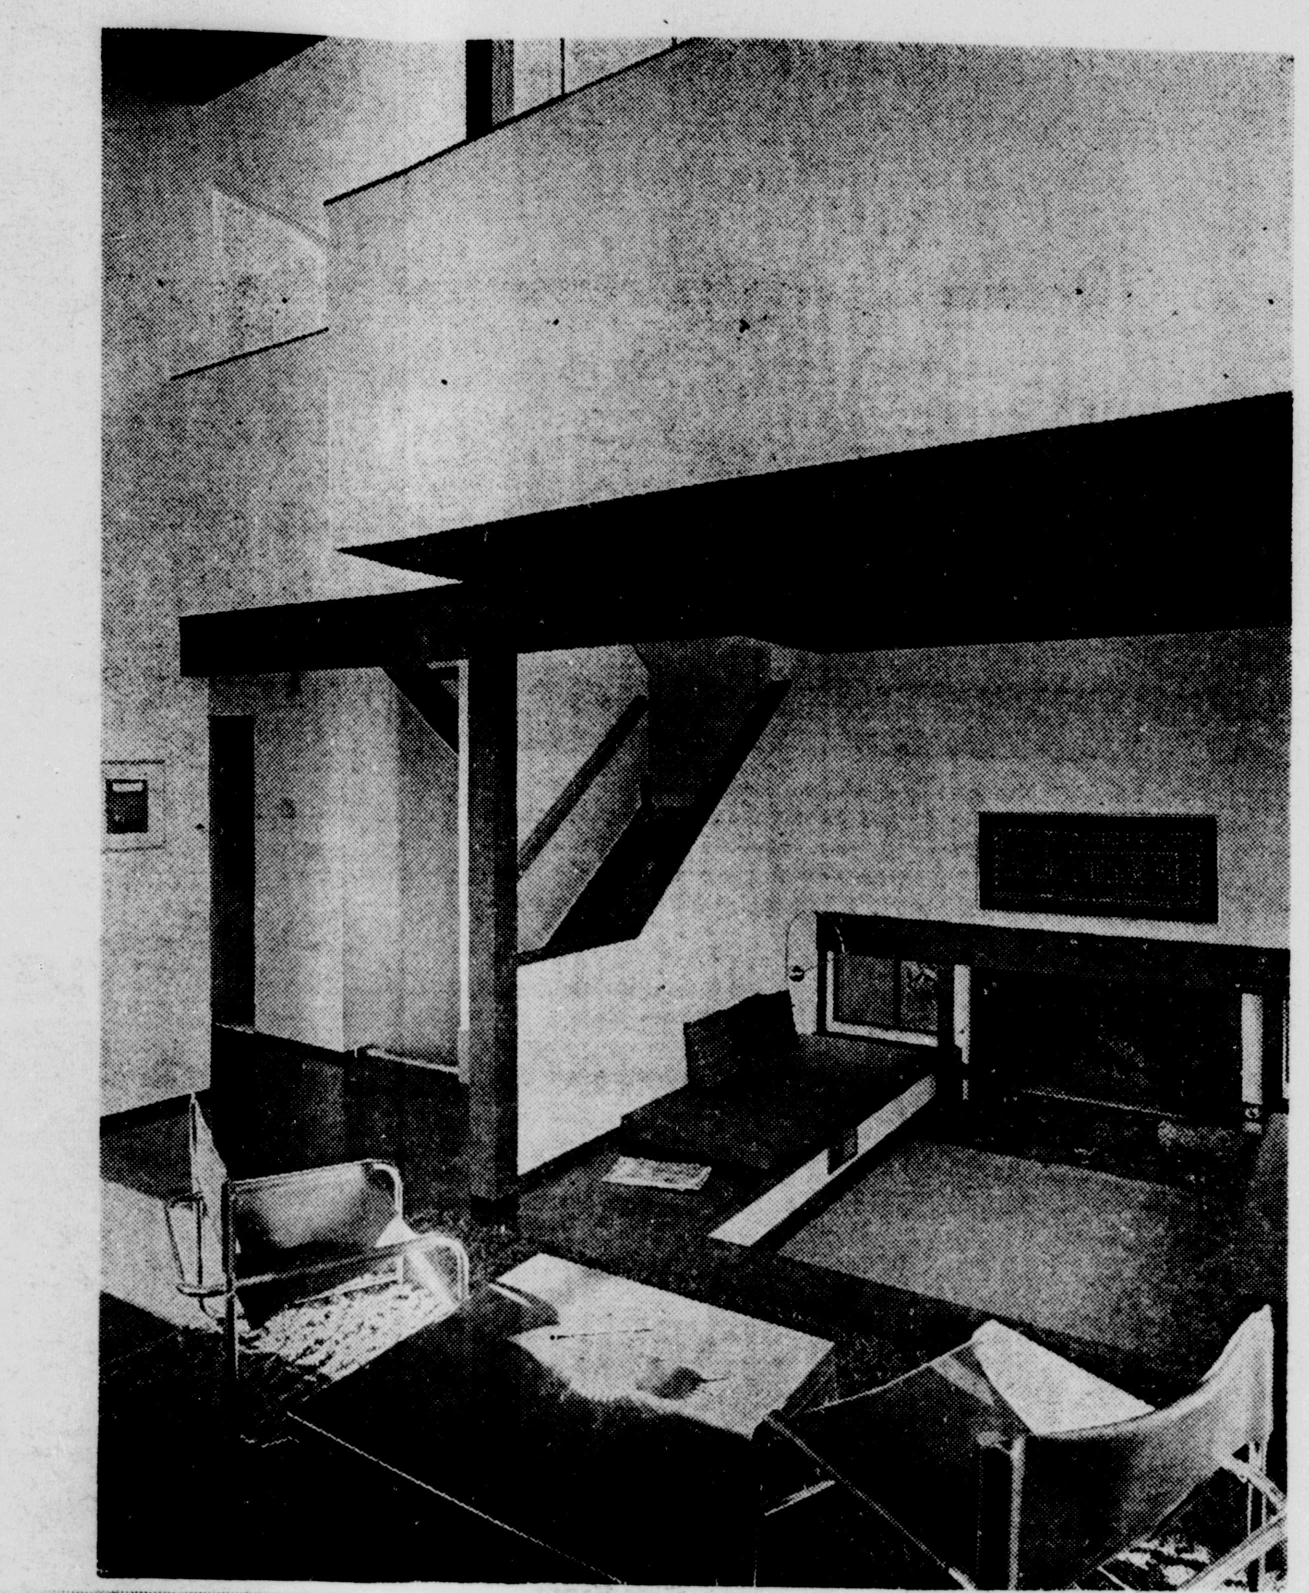
AFTER CAPTURING three awards for two consecutive years in the prestigious Homes for Better Living judging, the architectural and planning consultant firm of Fisher-Friedman Associates has bested its own record with four prizes in the 1969 competition. Included are a merit award for the MarinView, Mill Valley, house above built for Allan-Marin Co., a merit award for the Mariner Square apartment-recreation complex in Newport Beach constructed for the Irvine Co., and honorable mention for Ballena Bay townhouse-marina complex in Alameda and a custom-built residence in Alamo.

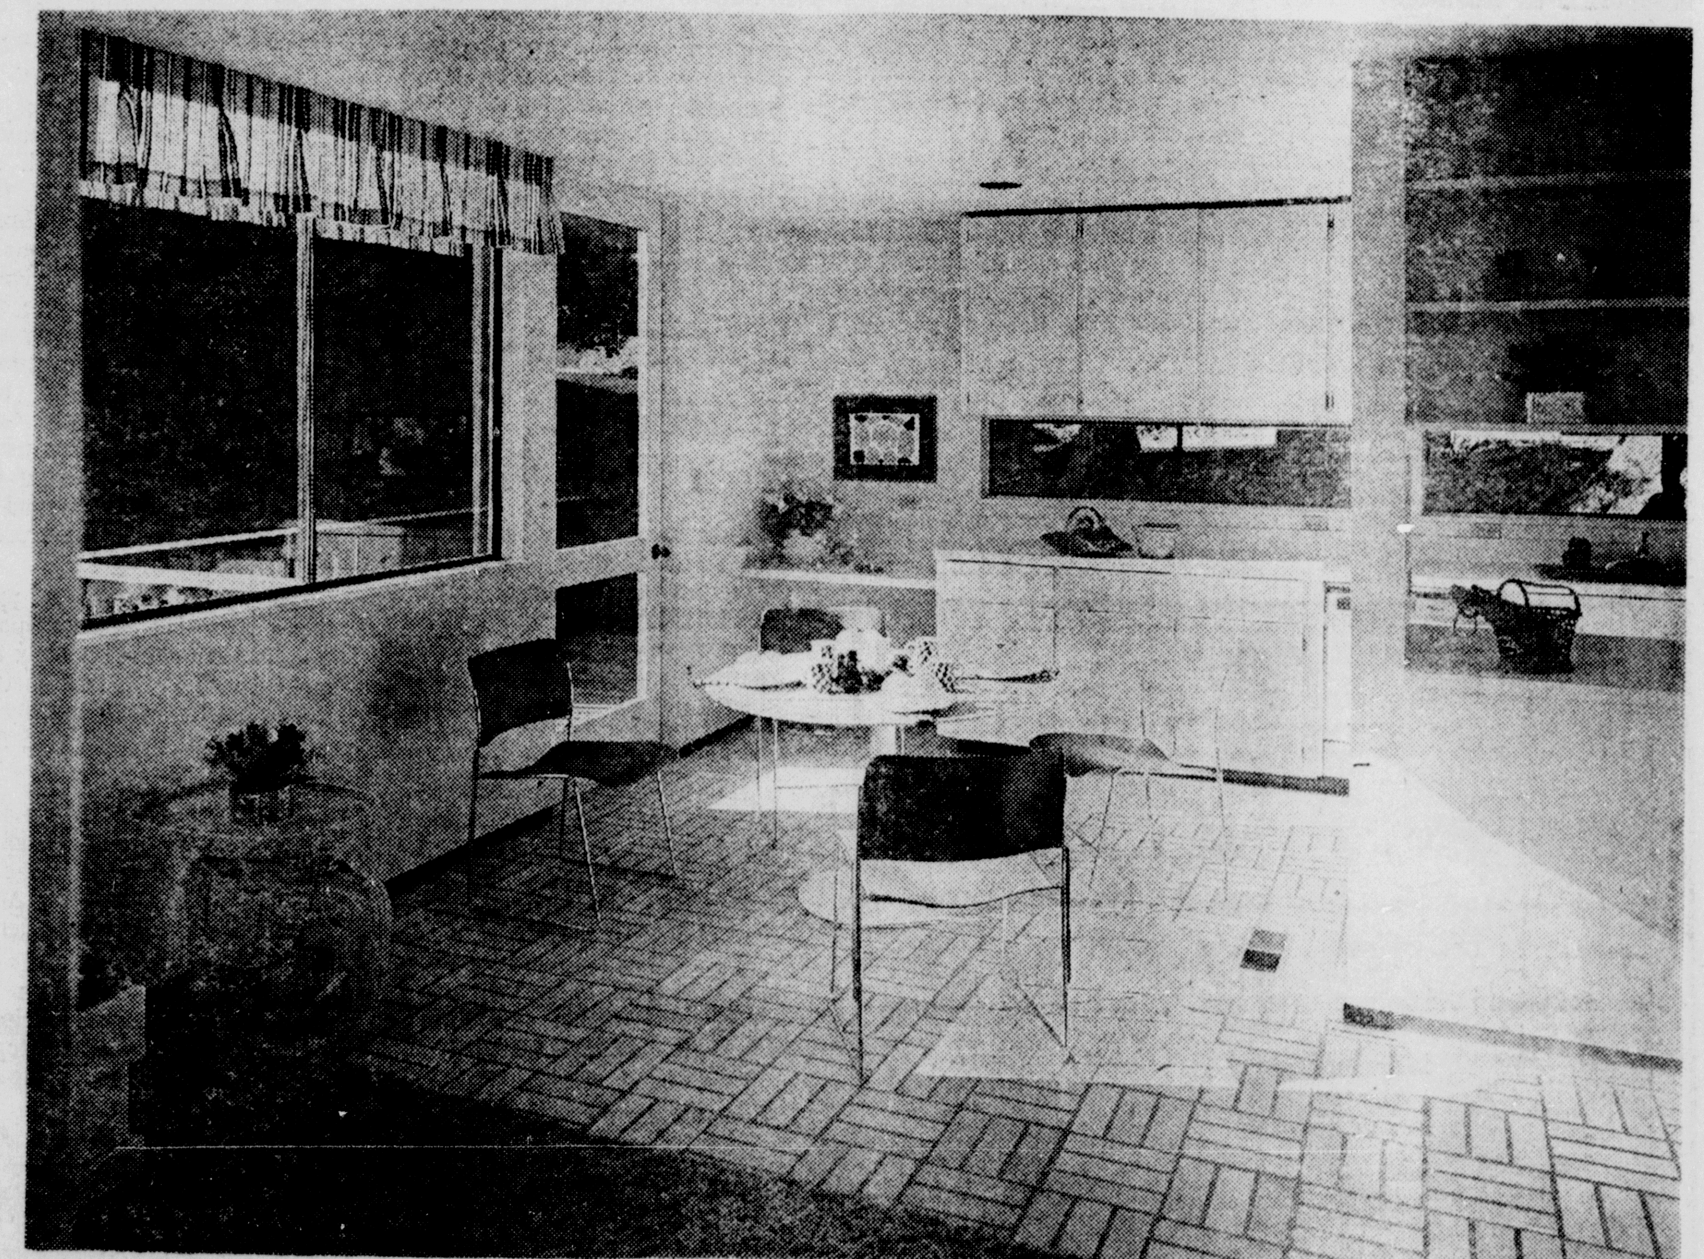




ABOVE, the Model D plan for MarinView which won for its architects Fisher-Friedman Associates of San Francisco a Homes for Better Living merit award includes a sunken fireside nook off the living room that snuggles beneath the adult retreat of the master bedroom. At upper right, the dining room comes with bronze anodized aluminum sliding doors that lead to the sundeck. MarinView is a 12-million-dollar, 320-home development being built in the Mill Valley hills.

Marin Living

AT LEFT, the MarinView home recognized for excellence by Homes for Better Living judges is in the extreme right of the photograph, and appears to blend in nicely with the sloping terrain and trees that surround the site. Builders Resources Corp. of Los Angeles has joined with Allan-Marin Co. of Mill Valley in the building of the new community.



THE KITCHEN OF the award-winning MarinView home follows the Model D design, one of several alternates, and features an outdoor breakfast area to the left of the glass door. Well-detailed cabinetry with a novel window treatment is another special feature. Partners A. Robert Fisher of Belvedere and Rodney F. Friedman of Tiburon and associate Robert J. Geering of Mill Valley share the Homes for Better Living honors. (Photos by Joshua Freiwald)

Home Of Bristlecones

You can go back more than 4,000 years by traveling to the top of the White Mountains bordering the Owens Valley on the eastern side of the Sierra Nevada.

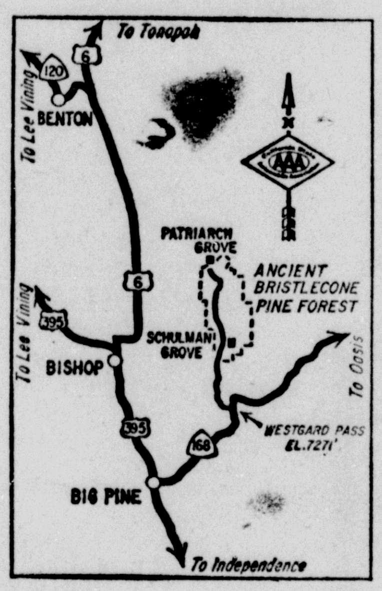
Here the bristlecone pine lives in a remote, forbidding land that rises almost 12,000 feet, seemingly a dead mass of wind-scoured trunks and twisted limbs.

FOR ALL OF their vast age these bleakly tan, gray, reddish and white trees are stunted giants which were growing 1,000 years before the oldest giant redwood broke from the soil.

As you travel up Westgard Pass, east of Big Pine, look west for a view of the Palisades with their sharp peaks towering above their glaciers.

Tilted layers of bedrock are exposed by the streams that flow down from White Mountain as the road winds through impressive narrow canyons. This rock is several million years older than the granite of the Sierra Nevada.

FROM THE turnoff at Westgard Pass the pinyon-juniper forest is soon replaced by timberline trees, limber pine and bristlecone mixed. As you travel higher, only the bristlecone survives.



THIS MAP directs the motorist to the home of the rare and ancient bristlecone pine, the oldest of them, Methuselah, 4,600 years.

All the immensity of the Sierra Nevada can be admired as the road climbs higher. Superlative views of this massive block of granite stretch north and south and you can see 12 of the 14 highest peaks in California.

At 10,000 feet is the Schulman Grove area named after the determiner of the trees' great age, Dr. Edmund Schulman. Here atop the White Mountains he discovered the oldest tree of all, 4,600-year-old Methuselah.

TWO TRAILS lead to the oldest trees with a half-mile hike over easy trail to Pine Alpha, the first 4,000-year-old tree which Schulman dated. It's a two-mile hike along Methuselah Walk and the other many ancients.

The land of the bristlecone has no streams and almost no underbrush, and most of the trees in the forest are less than 30 feet tall, although some may be as much as 50 feet high.

If you look down you will find you are stepping on small plants whose colors blend in well with the rock. Most are in bloom during July and August with their blooms of lavenders, silvers, pale yellows, gray greens, tan, pinks, rusts and dull reds.

CENTURIES OLD, the gnarled and twisted forms of the bristlecone pines that cling to the eastern slopes of the Sierra Nevada offer visitors to that remote area a never-to-be-forgotten sight. Botanists say they predated the redwoods by a thousand years. (California State Automobile Association photo)

ALWAYS GROWING slowly, the bristlecone in dry years just endure their harsh gravelly soil, adding only a microscopic ring, perhaps only adding an inch of growth in 100 years.

Further up the mountain, beyond Schulman Grove, is the Patriach, with a circumference of 36 feet eight inches and only 1,500 years old. Unusual in this area are the "pickaback" trees that grow not up but sideways, adding circumference but not height.

Canada's Yukon Territory Is Heaven To The Fisherman

Are you looking for a fishing spot where you can have a lake or stream to yourself?

Where you won't need to brag about the one that got away, because the ones you catch are bragging size? Where the catch limit works out to 10 fish an hour in six hours of fishing?

And where the license fee for visitors is less than you'd expect to pay for a resident license?

Cast your line in Canada's Yukon Territory.

TUCKED UP in the northwest corner of Canada, right next door to Alaska, the Yukon offers over 200,000 square miles of mountain wilderness and some of the finest fresh water fishing found anywhere.

You can camp free in a government campground or pick your own spot for total privacy. If you're not the camping type, you can stay in a lodge, motel or hotel.

Good to excellent fishing can be found within a few minutes' drive of even the largest city. In 1968, a 19-pound, two-ounce rainbow trout was taken just three miles from Whitehorse, the capital city. Arctic grayling are taken regularly inside the city's boundaries.

OR PERHAPS you really want to get away from it all. Then charter a float plane to take you into one of dozens of remote lakes where it's possible to catch your limit on a few casts.

Several areas have licensed fishing guides who will take you out after the lunkers. Some of them go as far as to guarantee you fish or you don't pay the fee, they're so sure of a catch. The guides will supply their services, along with boat, motor and fishing gear.

Now, about those catch limits:

IN ONE DAY you can haul in 20 northern pike, 10 Arctic grayling, five lake trout, five dolly varden, five kokanee, five rainbow trout, two steelhead and two in the aggregate of King or Coho salmon. Grayling and trout under eight inches must be returned to the water.

Yukon has no closed season on sports fishing and there are no catch limits on whitefish, burbot (ling cod), inconnu (shee fish) or cisco (fresh water herring).

Most popular species, and the most abundant, are the lake trout, Arctic grayling and northern pike.

YUKON FISH are particularly fine eating because of their glacier-fed, blue-water environment. They come in all sizes and a collossal lake trout, taken upstream from the Carcross Bridge, weighed 87 pounds and was five feet, two inches long.

In the lakes which are more easily accessible, lake trout of five to 10 pounds are common and larger ones, up to 30 pounds, are frequently taken. The larger ones are usually caught by anglers fishing from a boat. Twenty to 30-pound lakers are common in the more remote lakes.

Lake trout seem to prefer large bait. It's not unusual to take two pounders on a six to 10 inch spoon. Fresh bait includes frozen smelt, or herring, from a supermarket, or strips of fresh fish.

NEARLY ALL streams crossed by the Alaska Highway and other main roads in the Yukon will yield catches of Arctic grayling, even to inexperienced fishermen.

Many of these streams also support one or more species of trout and visitors often stop at such streams for an on-the-spot fresh fish barbecue.

Grayling, kokanee and members of the trout family are taken on flies, small spinners or spoons. This also applies to whitefish, which are becoming increasingly popular with fly and light tackle fishermen.

THE GENEROUS limit of 20 northern pike is easily filled waters frequented by these fish. The angler's bag often has more than one pike approaching four feet in length.

On top of all this, anglers fishing in the Yukon are given a bonus in unsurpassed mountain scenery, clean waters and clear, invigorating atmosphere, which increases the appetite and makes those freshly-caught fish taste even better.

DON'T CALL IT THE 'SIERRAS'

"I'm off to the High Sierras."

This incorrect reference to the Shining Range, the Snowy Mountain, the Range of Light, is one that is uttered by people who think primarily of its many majestic peaks and spires and pinnacles and domes.

The Sierra Nevada, according to the National Automobile Club, is a single mountain with all its components joined at the foot, a huge block of stone with a total area greater than that of Rhode Island.

Measuring 400 miles in length and 40 to 60 miles in width, the scenic mountain has eight national forests, three national parks, one national monument and five wilderness areas within its reaches.

Of the awe-inspiring peaks, 500 tower more than 12,000 feet in the air. Among the 12 that display glaciered summits over 14,000 feet is Mount Whitney, the second highest point in the United States.

Where Bat Is Respected

Bats, often disdained and even feared, are a popular tourist attraction at Carisbad Caverns National Park in New Mexico.

In immense numbers, the bats emerge from the cave each summer evening, spiral upwards and then stream southward to separate into flocks for night foraging.

The return to the cave is made at dawn when they dive into the entrance and fly directly to what is known as the Bat Cave to spend the day, roosting by hanging downwards from the walls or ceilings in dense clusters.

During the winter most of the bats leave the caverns and migrate to warmer regions.

Guides tell visitors that although bats have long been maligned in folklore and superstition, "the ones here are not only harmless, but beneficial. They destroy harmful insects and produce guano, a valuable fertilizer."

The Travel Pages

Before The Trip Must Come The Shots

By MURRAY J. BROWN

NEW YORK (UPI)—So you are all set for your first trip aboard. You have your passport and visas and confirmed transportation and hotel and other reservations.

Now all you have to do is wait for your departure date, grab your bags, kiss your relatives goodby, and take off.

Right?

Wrong!

When was the last time you were vaccinated against smallpox? If it was more than three years ago, you might have to be inoculated again. And, depending on your travel plans, it may be necessary to have other shots.

ALL AMERICANS traveling overseas, except in certain areas in the Western Hemisphere, are required to have proof of immunization against smallpox. And the vaccinations MUST be recorded in the official International Certificates of Vaccination and bear the authorized stamp of your local public health service.

True, there are some foreign countries where officials don't even look inside the special form approved by the World Health Organization (WHO). But there are others who check carefully and may refuse you admission if the health record is not properly executed and authenticated.

The U.S. Public Health Service also requires validated proof of such immunity from American citizens returning from foreign travel, with the exception of the specifically-exempt areas. Failure to provide such evidence could mean vaccination at the port of entry or surveillance up to 14 days, or both, or even detention for up to two weeks.

THE 16-PAGE health record can be obtained at U.S. Passport agency offices or from your travel agent and airlines and steamship companies. I keep mine stapled to my passport as a precaution against loss and to help speed clearance through control points.

Your travel agent or carrier should be able to advise you if other immunizations may be necessary. These, too, should be entered in the official certificate.

In some countries, inoculations against yellow fever and cholera are mandatory and you could be turned back or quarantined for up to two weeks. These immunizations also must be validated by your local health authority.

AMERICANS, WHO have visited or passed through countries where cholera, smallpox, typhus and other contagious diseases may be prevalent, face surveillance or detention for up to 14 days on return to the United States unless they have had the necessary inoculations.

Immunization against yellow fever, good for 10 years, can be only obtained at specified U.S. Public Health centers. Anti-cholera shots, valid for six months, and other required and recommended vaccinations may be administered by your own doctor.

For all international travel, the Public Health Service recommends protection against tetanus, diphtheria and poliomyelitis.

THE RECOMMENDATION for anti-typhoid shots was dropped last year for Americans visiting Europe and other developed areas. But there have been outbreaks of the disease, however, in a number of countries with high sanitary standards so you might want to take precautions anyway.

All inoculations should be obtained well in advance of departure, not only because of possible reactions but some require a series of injections spaced over several weeks. And the immunizations are not considered effective until after periods ranging from six to 10 days.

As an additional protection, take a medical checkup while you get your shots. If your doctor should prescribe medication, take an ample supply as well as the prescription in case of emergency.

SEE YOUR dentist, too, and, if you wear glasses, take an extra pair and the prescription just in case. A first aid kit also could come in handy.

Travelers with heart ailments, diabetes, hemophilia, allergies and other health problems should wear tags or bracelets detailing their medical history. Such information could prove invaluable in emergencies.

Tags and bracelets can be obtained by writing to the non-profit Medic-Alert Foundation International at Turlock, Calif. The Medic-Alert disc—there is a charge—also carries the telephone number of its headquarters where collect calls may be made day or night for additional information if the bearer is stricken suddenly.

FOR FURTHER peace of mind, there is Intermedic. There is probably nothing more frightening than to fall ill in some country where the language is different from your own.

Intermedic provides members with a directory listing almost 400 doctors, and their telephone numbers, in some 80 countries overseas who speak English. Participating physicians provide services day or night for stipulated fees—at this writing, no more than $8 for an office visit, $10 for the first house or hotel call, and $15 for an emergency night call.

Membership for one year is $5 for an individual and $9 for a family. Intermedic's headquarters is at 777 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y., 10017.

The Feminine Touch In Tokyo

Women now are inspecting luggage at Tokyo International Airport.

To overcome a labor shortage and add a touch of glamor to travel, customs officials put 11 women in uniform and assigned them to inspect the baggage of passengers from abroad.

The women inspectors formerly were detailed to search women travelers suspected of smuggling narcotics or other contraband in their clothing.

NOTES TO TRAVEL BY

Japan Air Lines reports that fears of monumental jams and confusion on the Expo '70 grounds at Osaka and nearby hotels have proven unfounded, and that there are still seats on week day flights and hotel accommodations available to tour groups and individuals . . . Trans-World Airlines is offering a New York City Festival of the Art Tour that takes travelers into artists' studios and galleries under the guidance of expert and critic Alberto Cernuschi at $228 per person including accommodations in the New York Hilton . . . Weekend guest certificates in $10 and $50 denominations are being offered at 1,100 Holiday Inns . . . Miami Beach, suffering a dearth of visitors, has launched a courtesy campaign through its Tourist Development Authority after a survey showed rudeness was a major factor in the drop-off.

The Anatomy Of A Mad Mass Murderer

LINGARD by Colin Wilson; Crown, 286 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Colin Wilson, once the "whiz kid" of British literature, has been long been fascinated by violent crime — particularly the murderer who kills, not once, but several or many times.

Earlier this year he had published a study of murder through the centuries in which his thesis, supported not entirely convincingly, was that there have been trends or styles in homicide that are distinctive of their periods and thus are among the most revealing sources of understanding of man's past and present.

Now, in this novel, Wilson has relied heavily upon past research for that and earlier books to create a fictional multiple-killer.

His protagonist, Arthur James Lingard, is patterned principally after the infamous Dusseldorf mass murderer Peter Kurten. But Wilson also uses the case histories of other celebrated slayers in constructing Lingard's character and background.

His narrator is Dr. Kahn, psychiatrist for the prison where Lingard is incarcerated. The book deals with Kahn's almost obsessive investigation into the factors and motives that have made Lingard a rapist and killer.

The story that Kahn uncovers is sordid — of an orphaned boy who has transferred his Oedipus attachment unhealthily to his older sister. Who began mixing his undisciplined sexual appetite with fantasies in which he built up a wholly unrealistic, all-powerful picture of himself that he could never fulfill. The record discloses an arrogant, yet uncertain boy, youth and young man who has declared himself beyond the normal restraints of society.

To Wilson, his Lingard is an example falling somewhere between two classic patterns of violent criminals:

"The right man" type as outlined in A.E. Van Vogt's "The Violent Man" — the person who paranoically refuses to admit the possibility that he is or was ever wrong. It is a category in which belong many of the world's despots and dictators.

Wilson's own "outsider" classification — a person more imaginative and talented than those around him, possessor of more will and drive than they do. But whose special qualities are misdirected.

Lingard, however, seems much closer to Van Vogt's "right man" than to Wilson's "outsider." His special abilities exist only in relation to the generally drab people around him and the dreariness of his environment (an exception is his earthy sister Pauline, a far stronger and more interesting character than Lingard). His will and drive sputter and falter, even in their misdirection.

Wilson describes "Lingard" as "an attempt to point out that 'right men,' are not necessarily and completely wrong."

The effect upon this reader was the opposite. Lingard seemed to us an example of just how very wrong and just how dangerous these egomaniacs can be. And we do have many among us who cannot conceive or concede of their ever being mistaken. All are not violent criminals. But all are potential menaces.

Wilson has written with his usual fine feeling for rhetoric an unpleasant book saturated with sex and heavy with the confusions and heartaches of today's troubled society. It is not a book that makes with any clarity the kind of point he says he is attempting. It describes one aspect of man's malaise, but the treatments suggested seem to deal with symptoms, not the disease.

The Story Of Jerusalem Holds Key To Today's Mideast Crisis

TEMPLE BEYOND TIME by Mina C. Klein and H. Arthur Klein; Van Nostrand Reinhold, 191 pages. Reviewed by Paul Brindel.

"We cannot escape history," Abraham Lincoln warned in his second annual message to Congress.

Considering the millions this country has poured into Israel since its Independence Day, May 15, 1948, this book seems to be almost "must reading." It is "the story of the site of Solomon's Temple," but it compresses 30 centuries of history — King David in 1000 B.C. buying Mount Moriah, site of the first temple, founding Jerusalem which for centuries was to be called "the City of David."

"No city in all man's history is more famous," the man-and-wife authors point out. Besides the successive temples of Solomon, Zerubabbel and Herod the Great, Christian churches dating to the Byzantine era, there is the Dome of the Rock built in the Seventh Century on Mount Moriah to mark the place from which Mohammed ascended to paradise. Today's Middle East crisis "can only be understood through knowledge of the past," the authors insist.

Except from A.D. 1095 to 1171 when the Crusaders held Jerusalem, the book reveals that Jews "managed to live in or near the city" from its destruction and the temple by Titus in A.D. 75 to 1948 when the original "Old City" of Jerusalem became a part of Jordan. For the ensuing 19 years, until the "Six Day War" of June, 1967, Jews were excluded.

Yet, for the 12 and a half centuries Islam ruled the city, there is recounted some "accommodation" between Moslems and Jews. In 1847, the latter had grown to be the majority of the population of Jerusalem.

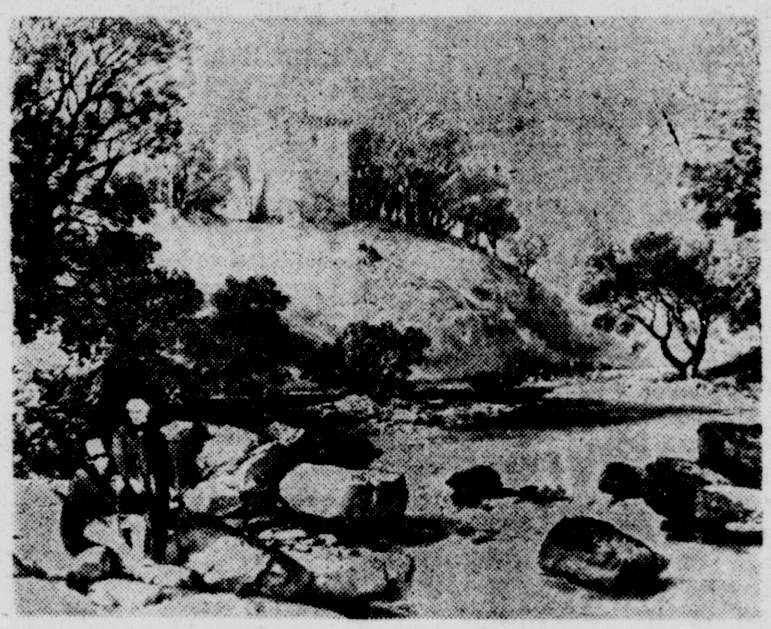
Mark Twain was the first American of note to visit Mount Moriah and the Dome of the Rock in 1867, from which non-Moslems had been excluded until 1865. In "Innocents Abroad," the humorist described his visit in detail.

A Seminar For Writers

Blair Fuller, Herbert Gold and Oakley Hall will conduct a "non-conference" for writers and persons interested in writing Aug. 22-29 at Squaw Valley, sponsored by University of California Extension.

A few short manuscripts will be selected for use in workshop sessions.

Mornings will be devoted to methods of developing personal expression as well as to the disciplines needed for effective communication. Afternoon sessions will offer general discussions of poetry, short fiction, the novel, non-fiction and the adaptation of fiction to film. There will also be evening meetings on such topics as "Can creative writing be taught?"



A LITHOGRAPH by G. Cattermole (1800-1868) showing William Wordsworth and Walter Scott at Newark Tower is among the pictures in the illustrated biography, "Wordsworth and His World" by F. E. Halliday, a $6.95 Studio Book published by Viking Press.

Delicate Topic, Quaintly Handled

HOW TO MAKE LOVE by Locke McCorkle; Grove Press, 147 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Marji Parr.

Man is the least instinctive beast in the animal kingdom; therefore, he must take lessons on making love. So holds the Bay Area author of this book, subtitled "The Spiritual Nature of Sex."

And, indeed, he may have a point. If only to unlearn what's been taught.

Locke McCorkle (obviously not a made-up name, unless perhaps by W. C. Fields), has, according to the book flap, combined writing with the construction business. One fancies him as one of those muscular street knaves that you just know is an artist or poet when he isn't making money. (An illusion shattered if he's neglected to use his Right Guard.)

But enough romancing, and back to "How to Make Love," a title reminiscent of the advertising theory that "How to" ads always sell. The book scores in the technique chapters, but is inclined to lose in the spiritual chapters, which are interwoven.

In a delicate subject, the style rarely offends, although there are those who prefer Anglo-Saxon brevity to mawkish euphemism.

On the plus side, McCorkle takes on the women's liberation issue solving the matter for once and all by instructing the "bra-burners" to give in, not to a man, but to their own sexuality.

On the minus side, McCorkle fluffs over lightly the encounter thing that's all around us . . . with sketchy references to the "Odd-Ball Circuit." It cannot be denied that the encounter movement is effecting some changes in some sexual patterns. It's shaking them up, anyhow.

The gallant McCorkle suggests that when the lady indicates an interest in making love, the gentleman, be he ever so bored with the idea, always professes enthusiasm. A charming notion, if impractical.

Non-traditional sex, the kind that is occasionally against the law, is simply left out of the book.

"How to Make Love" would be more agreeable if it were less quaintly sentimental, less arch. Nevertheless, it does have some helpful hints to the home-maker.

"Can Ball Point Ink Be Removed From A Garment?"

As strange as it may sound, hair-spray, the American Institute of Laundering has found, will remove ball-point ink stain.

Ball point ink stains have been a long-time headache for cleaners and home-makers. Removal has been a real trial. Now, A.I.L. suggests that any surface ink be scraped from the fabric. Care should be taken not to damage the fabric when scraping. Then apply ordinary lady's hair-spray. Allow it to dry, then have the garment drycleaned or laundered. If any stain remains, and some may, repeat the process. The A.I.L. Laboratory says you'll regain full usefulness from the ball-point ink stained garment by this method.

Two Sages Diagnose The Sick Society

THE PURSUIT OF LONELINESS by Philip Slater; Beacon Press, 154 pages, $7.50.

THE CRAZY APE by Albert Szent-Gyorgyi; Philosophical Library, 93 pages, $3.95.

By DON KEOWN

Two learned men, one an educator and social scientist, the other a researcher and physical scientist, have authored books in which they diagnose the condition of American culture as critical.

While they share the belief that our society is gravely ill, they are not in total accord as to the germs that have caused our sickness, nor as to the antidote that should be prescribed for recovery.

Philip Slater, Brandeis University's sociology department chairman, in his "The Pursuit of Loneliness," blames our problems upon our obsession with technology.

"I am arguing," he writes, "for a reversal of our old pattern of technological radicalism and social conservatism. We pretend that. . .we actually achieve social stability — that technological change can be confined within its own sphere. Yet this is not so. Technological instability creates social instability as well, and we lose both ways."

Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi, research scientist at the Marine Biological Laboratory, Woods Hole, Mass., and Nobel Prize winner for his discovery of Vitamin C, sees the problem differently in his "The Crazy Ape."

"It is evident to me," he writes, "that a world created by science can be run safely only by the spirit and methods of the science which created it. It is impossible to create a new world by means of science and then run it on the basis of outdated, sentimental principles like fear, lust for power and domination."

For Dr. Szent-Gyorgyi, "the spirit of science is that of goodwill, mutual respect and human solidarity." To him science has been the victim, not the culprit. It has not been the scientist who has misused the products of his creativity, but rather his exploiters.

But Slater sees technology itself as an enemy running wild, although he emphasizes that he is not advocating "any brand of bucolic romanticism."

"I only want to remove them (the machines) from their position of mastery," he says, "to restore human beings to a position of equality and initiative."

To regain his dignity, Slater warns, man must renounce his allegiance to the outworn concept of individualism, and adopt the communal and collective approaches suited to today's highly complicated civilization.

Slater is in agreement with psychiatrist Dr. Alexander Lowen who in his "Pleasure" (June 6 Marin Magazine) outlined his thesis that mankind has chosen the wrong objectives — money and power — when it should be striving for pleasure.

"In our society pleasure is allowable only as a means to an end which is itself a mere means," Slater claims. "It must in some way or another yield energy for the economy. Pleasure is made scarce, for example, by making it illegal. . ."

A direct confrontation between Philip Slater and Dr. Szent Gyorgyi to debate the proposition — has man perverted science, or has science enslaved man? — would be a memorable encounter. Perhaps there is some truth to both their charges, and man now finds himself subjugated by a Frankenstein of his own creation. But in this indirect collision of ideas through their books, at least, Slater seems to have a bit the better of the argument.

"We say," he writes, "this or that invention is valuable because it generates other inventions — because it is a means to some other means — not because it achieves an ultimate human end. We play down the 'side effects' that so often become the main effects and completely negate any alleged benefits.

"The advantages of all technological 'progress' will, after all, be totally outweighed the moment nuclear war breaks out. . ."

Despite some basic differences in their ideas, the shared concern of Philip Slater and Albert Szent-Gyorgyi brings them closer together in their thinking than they are separate.

The latter is as distrustful as the former of the old culture, and incensed by what he sees as a double moral standard for the individual and for the community or government.

"We go to the polls to elect hawks and vote endless billions for war and the formidable machines of killing and destruction, and then go to church and ask for God's blessing," Szent-Gyorgyi writes.

"Who will defend us against defense departments?" he cries.

His answer to his own question is that youth must undertake that task. He urges the young people of all countries to "get together and hammer out the constitution of the world they want to build." But he adds that not only must they plan for the future, but they must take immediate action by "hunting out of their governments the merchants of death and destruction."

The last is a suggestion that can only cause disquiet in an already nervous Establishment.

In two small books these two sages have given us much food for thought. In the finer analysis, their differences are not irreconcilable. Their agreement that there is cause for alarm and that there must be change — drastic change — is the central, urgent message of both books.

ALBERT Szent-Gyorgyi was born in Hungary in 1893 and educated in Budapest and at Cambridge. In 1937 he won the Nobel Prize for his studies on metabolism and for his discovery of ascorbic acid (Vitamin C). During World War II he was a fugitive, hunted by the Nazis. And after the war he fled Europe and Stalinism to come to this country where he has since carried on research at the Marine Biological Laboratory at Woods Hole, Mass. In his book, "The Crazy Ape," he expresses his despair at the way society has used his work and that of his colleagues in science, and challenges youth to build a better society making a richer, beneficial use of technology.

"UNDER THE Moon of Mars" (Holt, Rinehart and Winston, $7.95) is a history and anthology, with Sam Moskowitz as author and editor, of the curious fiction genre known as the "scientific romance" that began with the publication of Edgar Rice Burrough's adventure story of the book title in 1912. The selections are taken from the Munsey pulp magazines, and Moskowitz' history is as much a story of those publications as it is a story of the scientific romance tale.

Scence fiction fans, and particularly the older ones with lingering memories of the pulps, will regard this newest book with the same enthusiasm they have displayed for earlier Moskowitz-edited collections.

THE NOVEL "All About Hatterr" by G. V. Desani that achieved an "underground" popularity after its publication in 1948 has been reprinted by Farrar, Straus and Giroux in a $5.95 edition and is now billed as "a modern classic." Said T. S. Eliot of it: "In all my experience, I have never met with anything quite like it." You'll probably say the same. Certainly the language — "a sort of creative chaos," wrote Anthony Burgess — is unique. And language is the essence of the book.

DOVER Publications has issued a $3.75 reprint in its distinctive high quality paperback format of Janet Waring's "Early American Stencils on Walls and Furniture." The work, accepted as the most authoritative book available on its subject, a now nearly vanished art, first appeared in 1937, and is republished unabridged, with 166 plates of illustrations, showing views of stencils, close-ups of detail and tools.

THE ESSAYS that make up his "Dr. Outlandish: Drug Scene and Sundry Subjects" are described by their author, Dr. Charles H. Sprague, as "an antidote to hysteria."

Sprague, project director for a clinic, is one of those physicians who have stepped outside the medical Establishment to work with alienated youth and to write for the underground press. Dr. Outlandish is the name he has signed to those articles. And his chapter titles include the likes of "On 'Doing Up' in General and 'Speed' in Particular" and "In Pursuit of the Powder-Blue Double-Barrel Peppermint Metal-Flake Wedge."

The theme is not pro-drug. But society's present methods of dealing with the problem are often questioned. And Sprague attempts to use the verniacular of today's young to reach and impress upon them the danger of undisciplined experimentation.

Sleuths & Suspense

THE SECRET HOUSE OF DEATH by Ruth Rendell; Doubleday, 179 pages, $4.50. Reviewed by Mary Leydecker.

The setting is one of those dreary suburbs where neighbors delight in what appears to be a love affair between a housewife and a man who sells furnaces. Although the scene is England, there is a ring of familiarity about the situation for American suburbanites.

When Louise North and her suspected lover are found dead, everyone, including Susan Townsend, a rather sad young divorcee who lives next door, accepts the verdict of suicide.

Susan is even rather kind to Louise's bereaved husband.

In the end, however, Susan — and the reader — are convinced that circumstances were not at all as they appeared.

Susan is a likeable young woman, and the story has elements of humor and a pretty good surprise good ending.

Not at all a bad way to spend a couple of hours.

New Books For The Juniors

Somewhat belatedly, publishers have realized that young readers in the sub-teens and early-teens are capable of absorbing books of serious subject matter, intent and tone. For instance:

"Beyond Diplomacy" (Parents Magazine Press, $4.50) by writer and political science teacher Richard J. Walton deals with a topic that youngsters 12 and older formerly would have encountered only in a textbook or not at all.

Without pulling punches, Walton reviews a record neglected by many popular histories of U.S. military interventions in foreign countries — in Mexico, in Cuba, in the Philippines, in China, in the Caribbean, in Lebanon. The book stops short of the most controversial of all our military ventures, Vietnam. But young readers will be able to regard it with a better understanding of how we came to be involved after reading "Beyond Diplomacy."

It isn't always nice to Uncle Sam. But then, today's youth has shown an impatience with anything less then the total truth.

"Students in Revolt" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95) by Janet Harris, Long Island University teacher and long-time civil rights worker, and other contributors takes up a continuing chapter in our contemporary history that these young people are writing themselves. It is a sympathetic look at youthful unrest that sees a single thread — the quest for student power — running through all the various demonstrations and actions. Frustration is the key word. And the book spells it out.

"The Most Native of Sons" (Doubleday, $3.95) is a superior biography of Richard Wright by another major black writer, John A. Williams. It is a well-told story of triumph over the pressures that plague all black people — even the creative ones. It should lead to increased appreciation of Wright's great gifts. And to a tardy awareness of just how much society has wasted in ignoring the potential of an entire race. Williams makes these points without equivocation.

"Slavery in America" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95) by Robert Liston is part of the Of Black America Series, and is a history of America's most shameful institution. No attempt is made to make a pretty story of the practice by which men regarded and treated other human beings as so much livestock. Liston has researched deeply and has come up with shocking information. So monstrous were slavery's evil consequences, Liston notes, that black people still today are handicapped by its lingering repercussions. Liston turns a strongly worded spotlight on a subject generally glossed over by the school texts.

"Life in traditional Vietnam is rural and harmonious," begins the introduction to "The Toad is the Emperor's Uncle" (Doubleday, $3.95). It's a beginning that is enough to make one weep. The book, however, is a delightful and colorful retelling of old Indo-Chinese fables by Vo-Dinh, French-schooled Vietnamese-born artist now living in Pennsylvania. Vo-Dinh narrates in a warm style filled with child-appeal and has done his own illustrations that are stronger, darker than the usual delicate art of the Orient. Belatedly, Americans have learned that the Orient has produced other proud and cultured people besides the Japanese and the Chinese. Our old notions of superiority have been exploded. Best that the new generation learn that lesson early.

There was a time when sports-writing ranked as one of the "glamor" occupations, a career to which tens of thousands of small boys aspired, hopeful that some day they might mix and mingle with the fabled of the athletic world. Today it has somewhat less appeal for fewer youngsters. But it still remains an interesting field of endeavor as Robert Lipsyte of the New York Times demonstrates in his "Assignment: Sports" (Harper Row, $3.95). It is a panorama of Lipsyte's "beat" from the 1968 Olympics in Mexico City to baseball's spring training camp and Arnold Palmer on the golf course. Young sports "addicts" will enjoy this opportunity to "see" the greats of the games through the eyes of a perceptive and enthusiastic professional.

Literary "heroes," except for a few of the more adventurous like Jack London and Mark Twain, have been pretty much ignored as subjects of biographies for junior. Richard O'Connor moves into that void with his "John Steinbeck" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95), telling of the life, and the work and the beliefs of an American writer genuinely concerned and greatly gifted. It is nice to see a book about a modern literary figure, and O'Connor has performed his project with the excellence and sensitivity his subject merits.

"In the Wilds of Africa" (Four Winds, $3.95) by Robert Halmi is an exceptional book, despite the absence of color in the photographs. Halmi, a veteran of the safari and a network television director and cameraman, takes up the more interesting animals of the Dark Continent, one by one, and reveals some surprising and interesting facts about each. Some good animal photographs supplement his entertaining and enlightening text.

The Important Role Of Play During Childhood

THE COMPLETE BOOK OF CHILDREN'S PLAY by Ruth E. Hartley and Robert M. Goldenson; Apollo Editions, 484 pages, paperback, $3.95. Reviewed by Maxine Keown.

These two psychologists and guidance specialists first collaborated on this scholarly work about the important and often overlooked role of play in a child's development in the late 1950s. It was subsequently updated and revised, and this is the softcover version of that more recent edition.

The book has been much used and much praised as a guide for parents in providing their children with the most rewarding play tools and experiences.

From the baby in the crib to the older hobbyist and pet-owner, the many varying aspects of play are covered.

And despite the professional backgrounds of the co-authors, the book is entirely intelligible to the layman and filled with practical, every-day advice and explanations.

"The best play materials are often those we do not buy at all, but collect — beautiful junk," we are told, for instance, in an early chapter.

On The Stereo Scene

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—RCA is selling a recording of Shostakovich's 13th symphony on the allegation that it is a "symphony of protest" by a composer angry at the way things are in the Soviet Union.

Maybe so. It has had only three performances in Russia. It is a setting of poems by the eminent poet, Yevtushenko, one of which may have been offensive to Soviet authorities.

On the other hand, it is no less likely that the Russians found it too dull to perform often or to record. American performances rights were acquired by the Philadelphia Orchestra in the usual way.

And the Philadelphians have recorded it, with Eugene Ormandy conducting, with Tom Krause, the Finnish baritone, as soloist and with a Philadelphia male chorus. To speak softly, it is neither an exciting nor memorable symphony. The composer is using his established devices (3162).

Most provocative of the first Beethoven piano music recordings of this Beethoven's 200th birthday year is by Glenn Gould. As virtuoso he played the "Moonlight," "Appassionata" and "Pathetique." As musicologist he comments on them on the back of the album.

His admiration for Beethoven has reservations and his opinion of the "Appassionata" is a very low one. The "Pathetique" he admires within limits and the "Moonlight" is for him a "masterpiece." Virtuosos probably are well advised to keep their fingers busy and their mouths shut. Perhaps unjustly the reader-listener may well think the opinions are reflected in the playing (Columbia-7413).

It was inevitable that Beethoven's first known compositions would be recorded again, and here they are—the three "Elector" sonatas played by Jorg Demus and eight variations and a sonata for piano duet played by Demus and Norman Shetler. The composer was around 11 years old. The music has no suggestion of what he was to become (Deutsche-Grammophon 139448).

Much more interesting than very early Beethoven is fairly late Vaughan Williams. It is his two-piano concerto—two pianos to carry percussive weight over the accompanying orchestra. The recording was made by Vitja Vronsky and Victor Babin with the London Philharmonic, Sir Adrian Boult conducting, and also included is Boult's effective interpretation of Vaughan Williams' eighth symphony (Angel-36625).

Saga Of Marin's Miwok Indians Had A Sad Conclusion

Once Proud People Vanished From Region They Had Ruled

ed their Indian help kindly. But others were little more than slavemasters.

One of the better employers was Capt. William Richardson of the Rancho Saucelito. His son, Steve, said of his father's hands:

"It is well-known they enjoyed good health. They lived in an equable climate, had no booze to break down their health prematurely, and the habit to taking daily sweats with the accompanying plunge into cold water was conducive to good health. The blood was pure.

"THEY NEVER had a toothache. Probably this was due to their simple diet, without any element that would produce acidity. I never knew an Indian with a missing tooth unless he lost it by accident . . .

"They retained their eyesight, unimpaired, to a great age. I am sure I never saw a short-sighted Indian, and still less one who was noticeably deaf . . ."

Alas, the fate of most Indians in Marin was far less happy. An epidemic of smallpox that started at Fort Ross and swept through Sonoma and Marin took a heavy toll of their population.

AND WITH California now a state and Marin the 27th of the original counties, it was definitely white man's country.

The once plentiful game had been slaughtered by market hunters for hides and tallow. The Indians were forced to subsist on clams and fish, so that many lived along the shores of Tomales Bay.

A few remained in the Nicasio vicinity, among them Jose Caleistro, a chief and said to be the last of the full-blooded Indians of Marin.

There is a sad commentary that bespeaks the final fate of Marin's once thriving Indian populace in the "History of Marin County" published in 1880 by Alley, Bowen & Co. It states:

"THE NICASIO Indians were at once time a very powerful tribe numbering many thousands and filling the whole valley, but they have vanished before the silent forces of civilization . . . Dire contagion stalked through the land and claimed many tithings for the charnel house of death, and later the accursed 'firewater' of the white man overcame and destroyed the sons (of the once proud Indians), while the souls and bodies of the daughters were sold in prostitution . . .

"Thus have their ranks been decimated until scarcely a score can be mustered, and the once populous village contains only eight wigwams now.

"What few remain of the tribe live upon a tract of about 30 acres, situated about two miles east of Nicasio in a lovely valley which was purchased by Jose Caleistro, their last chief, of William J. Miller, several years ago, as a home for the remnants of his people. The county appropriates $40 a month for their support which together with the pittance of wages they earn and the game they kill, affords them a meager sustenance.

"THERE ARE five who are very aged, indeed — in fact, so old that nothing can be obtained that would establish the dates of their births, and they are almost helpless.

"They are patiently waiting for death to come and take them to their people who have gone before them, long ago, to the happy hunting grounds."

ARCHAEOLOGICAL DIGGINGS such as this one being conducted by San Francisco State College students at Marinwood have unearthed artifacts that have contributed to our knowledge of the Coast Miwoks and their way of life. Some 500 Indian mounds have been recorded in Marin County. (Independent-Journal photo)

It is a sad ending to a saga in which the white man once again covered himself with shame, rather than with glory.

AND IT BEHOOVES us all when we sometimes feel superior to these primitive aborigines who are among us no more to stop and wonder:

Are fume-spewing automobiles really superior to fleet Indian ponies? Are processed and re-processed foodstuffs really better for us than the simple fare of the Indians? Is the hectic pace we set for our daily lives really more fulfilling than the leisurely life lived by the Miwoks?

Might we not still learn some lessons from these humble people who lived in harmony rather than hostility with nature?

ARTIFACTS unearthed from Indian mounds, such as this spearhead held by Kate Partride, have told us much about Marin's Indians.

The 'Cone Family' Will Serve You Well

For real 12-months-of-the-year beauty, the foliage of evergreen conifers can't be beat. Marin nurserymen have coniferous (cone-bearing) plants to fit every landscape situation — from low-growing junipers to giant redwoods.

Within the juniper classification there are groundcover types, low-growers for borders, excellent medium-sized ones for foundation plantings, and columnar-types for outstanding accents.

AT GROUND level the blue-gray coloration of San Jose and Bar Harbor varieties and the silver-blue of Wilton's Juniper are excellent choices for filling-in expanses.

A step higher, Andorra Juniper and compact Golden Pfitzer Juniper are self-shaping and spreading. The latter's coloration is a highlight and Andorra's blue-gray foliage takes on a handsome plum color in colder months.

Gold Coast Juniper, which has chartreuse shadings to crisp green foliage, is a newer introduction with great promise.

IT'S HARD TO pass up the popular Pfitzer Juniper with its bluish-green color and spreading fine branches. This one is a foundation planting favorite and enjoys great use in local landscapes.

Blue Vase and Pathfinder are the names of two upright-growing junipers that are exciting accents in the garden. From a distance or up close, these take everyone's fancy. Your nurseryman will have these or similar varieties for you to use.

Yews are noted for the dark green of their needles. They are adaptable and hardy, even in partial shade. Erect-growers, in dense upright columns, yews are lovely in the ground or in large tubs. They are ideal in formal settings.

A FEW MORE of the many conifer cousins include the many pines, arborvitae, cedar, cypress and spruce.

Members of the "cone family" are noted not only for their beauty, but their ability to survive under severe conditions. For Marinites, this indicates the various conifers require little attention.

THERE ARE coniferous plants to fit almost every landscape need. In fact, that can be said of the juniper family alone. Shown here in the foreground is a planting of the groundcover-type Emerald Spreader with its green branchlets providing a feathery appearance. In the background is the Table Top Blue Juniper, a medium-grower excellent as a showpiece with its semi-spreading, flat-top silvery-blue branches. Junipers offer an array of forms, textures and colors as well as sizes.

Gift Ideas For Gardening Dads

Father's Day is June 21, and throughout Marin many gardening dads will be gifted, with a variety of prized plants, garden gadgets and books.

For the family whose dad is a green thumber, Father's Day shopping is simplified. Anything that nurtures his horticultural instincts will be appreciated and cherished.

Nurserymen report one of the "most wanted" gift items today is a tubbed dwarf citrus. Dwarf citrus in a redwood tub provides year-'round enjoyment — luxuriant foliage, fragrant blossoms and colorful and tasty fruit.

LOCAL NURSERIES have the citrus varieties best for our area and an assortment of containers into which your choice may be planted.

Some nurserymen will have larger-sized specimens available, and chances are these will already be adorned with fruit.

Perhaps "Pop" wouldn't pamper himself by buying his very own fertilizer spreader with which to feed his lawn, but you can imagine his delight on Father's Day when he receives his own. A suggestion would be for a thoughtful offspring to volunteer to feed the lawn for Father; but he will probably want to try out the new spreader for himself — first!

MANY NURSERIES have varieties of plant materials — such as Wax Leaf Privet, Eugenia, or Myrtus — trained into topiaries, globes or pyramids. Chances are if Dad is a regular visitors to the neighborhood nursery he has had his eye on one of these attractive specimens. These may be planted to dramatize an entryway or used as a focal point where their magnificence will show, or used as decorative pieces in tubs or large pots.

There's a pride of ownership that accompanies such unusual plants — as is the case with all living gifts.

Visit your nursery and investigate the Father's Day gift opportunities.

Besides a variety of blooming plant materials and foliage plants you'll find how-to gardening books, specialized garden equipment and a myriad of accessories which will add to the enjoyment of gardening for your Dad.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

Here is the Marin gardener's checklist for the coming week:

✓Grow your own corsages. Gardenias are available in containers at nurseries, and will give you not only exquisite white blooms but also a charming garden fragrance in coming summer evenings.

✓Cultivate your garden beds regularly to eliminate young weeds and to loosen soil compacted by watering.

✓Hurry to plant tuberous begonia seedlings and chrysanthemum plants.

✓Hydrangeas can be planted now in rich, well-drained soil and in filtered shade. The newer, low-growing hydrangeas are ideal for tubs or for planting beneath trees. Keep them well watered during the summer.

✓Don't hesitate to thin out fruit trees that are bearing too heavily. You will encourage larger, more perfect fruit by so doing.

✓There is still time to plant summer bedding plants, but do it now. In planting, be sure to turn the soil deeply enough to insure a free and easy root run.

✓Mulching, especially around shallow-rooted specimens such as camellias, azaleas and fuchsias, is the secret to freshness in the summer garden. Don't spread a paper-thin layer. Peat moss, leaf mold or the like can go on two inches thick, bark products even more thickly.

Plywood—The Versatile Building Product

Plywood — those great big boards offered in a variety of grades and types — is probably one of the most versatile building products you can buy from your lumber dealer.

With it, you can panel a room, build a boat, construct a house — 'most anything.

Plywood comes in standard sheets of four by eight feet, although larger lengths are available, and some lumber dealers pre-cut standard sheets to handy sizes such as two by four feet, etc.

DOUGLAS FIR plywood — the most common — comes in two types: interior and exterior.

Exterior has a waterproof glue bond between laminations; interior is intended for use inside and is so fabricated. Both types are plainly marked.

Plywood also is graded according to the quality of the surface of the panels. There are many grades; however, you'll probably need to know only the following information for most projects.

INTERIOR PLYWOOD

Panels, referred to as "good both sides," are graded A-A. It is smooth and free from knot holes and imperfections on both surfaces and it is used where both sides of the panel will show.

A-D grade panels are good on one side with some knot holes and cracks on the other side. If this side will be finished, you can fill the imperfections with water-mixed wood putty, sand it smooth, and paint over it.

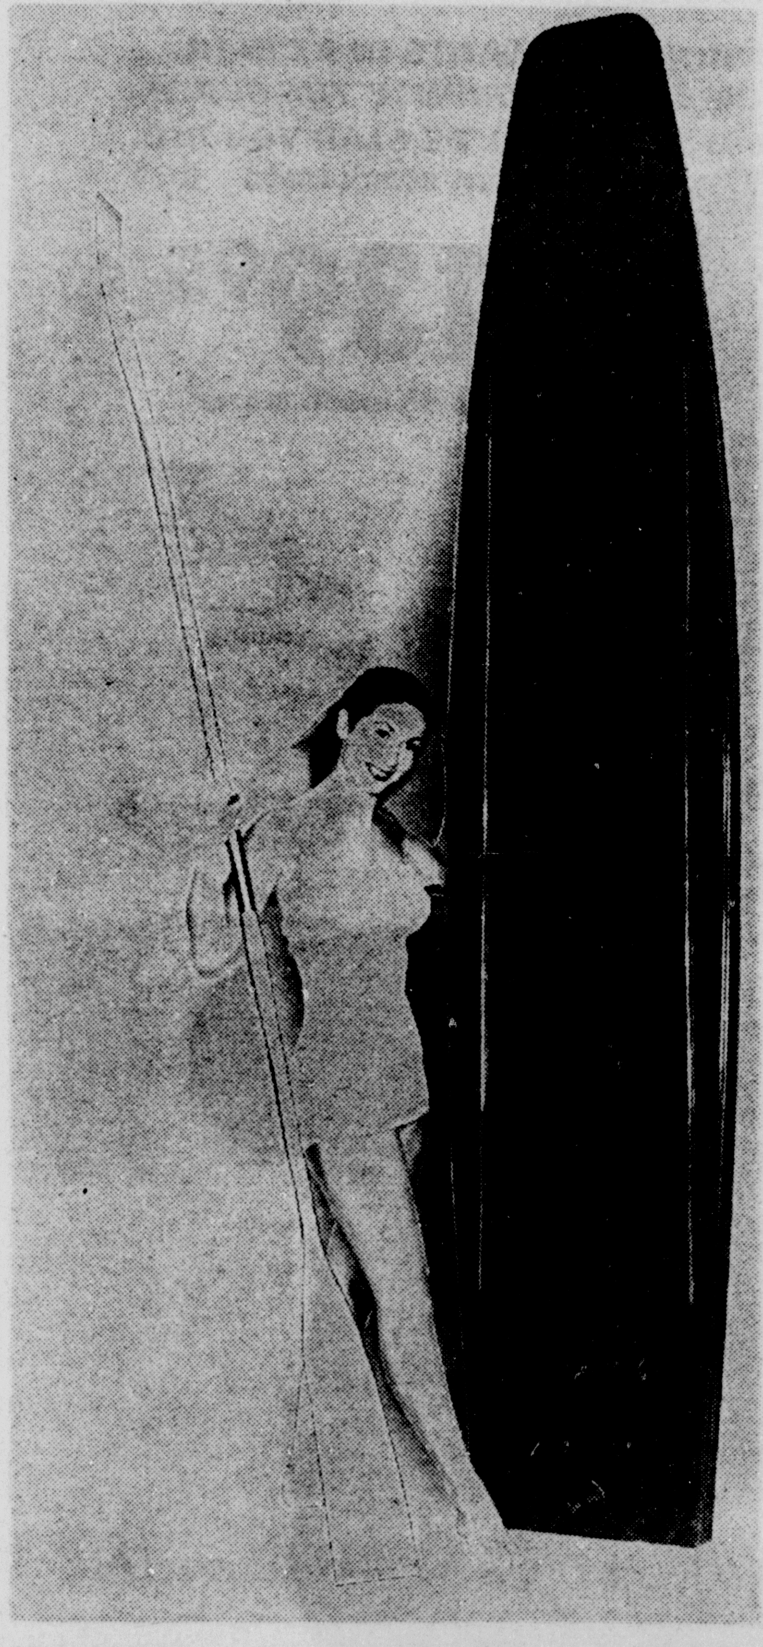
EXTERIOR PLYWOOD

Similar to interior panels in A-D grade. Exterior A-C panels can be used for outdoor projects where the plywood itself will be the finished surface.

Sheathing grade plywood is termed C-D and is used for the exterior skin of a house or roof where another material will be applied over it. Use this material for playhouses, tool sheds, and projects where the panel will be covered from the elements.

THROUGH MODERN manufacturing techniques, there are many special kinds of plywood panels made — textured for decorative effects, overlaid, marine, and, of course, hardwood-plywood surfaces for paneling a wall. The latter come in a variety of woods — walnut, cherry, mahogany, oak, etc.

Most are prefinished so all you have to do is install it.



SUMMER TIME is surfing time. And with the aid of Surfboard Pattern No. 247 that you can obtain by sending $1 to Independent-Journal, Post Office Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., 10510, you can build your own sturdy, lightweight unsinkable board. The Easi-Bild pattern provides a materials list and complete step-by-step directions.

A Gazebo Makes The Ideal Place For The Outdoor Summer Party

With an entertainment gazebo, the summer hostess can enjoy the party as much as the guests.

Instead of being isolated in the kitchen with last-minute preparations, she can join the crowd and let the food practically take care of itself.

An outdoor entertainment center should be planned for performance as well as beauty. That means built-in conveniences, such as a barbecue, storage for fuel and utensils, and if possible, a refrigerator drawer to cut down on trips to the kitchen. The gazebo should have all-weather wood counters and benches to make eating and conversation areas within easy reach of the food center. The first step is to choose a good plan and the right materials.

FOR LUMBER, you can't go wrong with a western wood such as Douglas fir or red cedar.

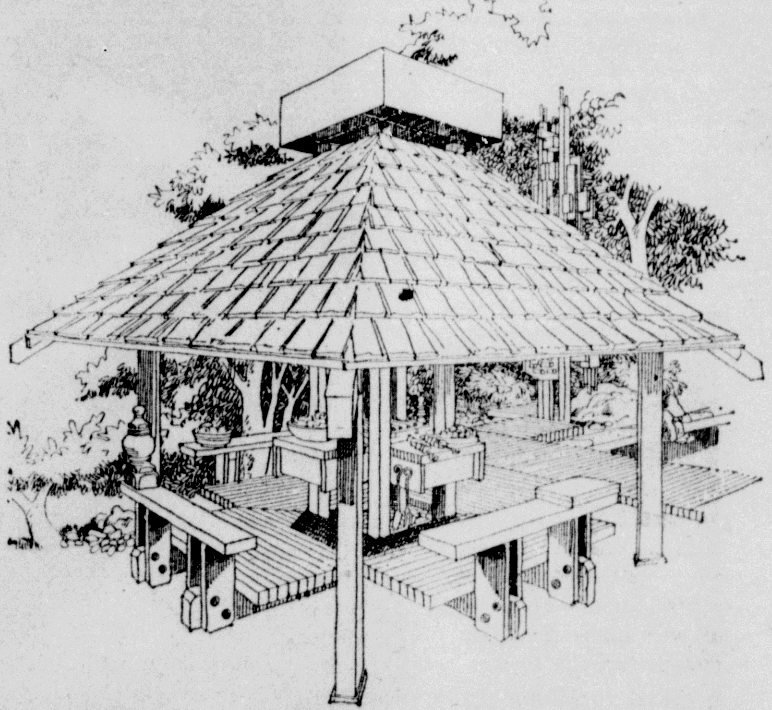
One plan shows a gazebo with a basic structure of four - by - eight - inch posts, resting on concrete footings, and a red cedar shake roof. The area beneath the roof is laid with tile and covered with coarse gravel for drainage.

The central barbecue fire, which is vented by a vertical flue extending through the roof, has a cap of matching red cedar boards. Built-in storage, refrigerator drawer and counters are clustered around the barbecue.

NEXT COMES the floor of the gazebo. In this case two - by - three - inch fir decking, nailed on edge, extends out to the roof line, where peripheral benches of two - by - three - inch planks are bolted to the deck supports.

This gazebo is square. The floor area measures 12 feet on a side, and the roof's overhang extends its coverage to 18 feet on each side. These dimensions can be changed with few complications except possibly for altering the roof pitch.

For detailed plans of the entertainment gazebo and four other garden structures, write to Western Wood Products Association, Department 539-P, Yeon Building, Portland, Ore., 97204. Enclose 15 cents in coin.



IT'S A BREEZE to entertain in this gazebo with its built-in barbecue, storage areas, wood counters and benches. A refrigerator drawer saves trips to the kitchen. The deck is laminated two-by-three-inch Douglas fir, the roof cedar shake. Send 15 cents to Western Wood Products Association, Department 539-P, Yeon Building, Portland, Ore., 97204, for the plans.
